Mild Address By Roosevelt Avoids Court, Spares Foes

Cheyenne Speech Proves to Be Restrained Defense of Spending.

O'Mahoney Given Chilly Reception

Observers Sight Radical Change in Tactics of President.

En Route Through Wyoming With President Roosevelt, Sept. 24.—Contrary to Nation-wide expectations, President Roosevelt today passed up an opportunity to strike out at those Democratic Senators who were responsible for the defeat of his Supreme Court reorganization bill.

Instead of Mr. Roosevelt's widely heralded speech at Cheyenne, Wyo., turning out to be a politically historic utterance, as was expected, it was an innocuous defense of Federal public works expenditures, with a promise by the President that "the Government of the United States is not going broke."

Not even indirectly did the President refer to his Supreme Court issue, nor did he mention the name of Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, ardent Democratic opponent of that plan, in whose home town he was speaking. Although Mr. Roosevelt pointedly failed to invite O'Mahoney to join the Presidential party, the Wyoming Senator was among the first to greet Mr. Roosevelt today—in the expressed role of "private citizen"—and he traveled six hours aboard the Presidential train from Cheyenne to Casper in his Senatorial role.

Chilly Politeness.

Mr. Roosevelt treated Senator O'Mahoney, as far as could be observed, with chilly politeness. Yet he showed to him, with one exception, all the consideration he displayed toward his ardent New Deal colleague, Senator H. H. Schwartz. This exception occurred at Casper, Wy., where Mr. Roosevelt spoke of his fight to preserve Democracy and took a fling at those who pay "lip service to my objectives." There he let Schwartz present him to a crowd of several thousand. Schwartz lives at Casper.

In Cheyenne, O'Mahoney's hometown, however, Gov. Miller introduced Mr. Roosevelt. But at Casper, O'Mahoney took a place beside the President on the rear platform of the train. In the parade around Casper, Miller rode with President and Mrs. Roosevelt, O'Mahoney sharing an automobile with Schwartz and Presidential Secretary McIntyre.

In his Casper speech, made just

'Kastigate Kalumniator,' Klan Urges; Kross Burns

Pittsburgh, Sept. 24 (AP).—A fiery cross blazed early today near the farm home of Ray Sprigle, Pittsburgh newspaper man who wrote a series of articles associating Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black with the Ku Klux Klan.

Beside the cross stood a wooden obelisk on which were painted the words:

Commissioners 'Completely Indifferent to Plight of Children Once Fed by WPA, Mrs. Boyle Declares in Citizens' Protest.

Eight thousand Washington school children, deprived of lunches which once were provided by WPA, are falling into a state of malnutrition, Mrs. John Boyle, jr., said last night as the schools closed after their first full week.

Mrs. Boyle is chairman of the citizens' committee formed to raise funds to meet the emergency created when it was learned the WPA cannot provide food for the school lunches this year, its decreased budget being enough only for "servicing" the project.

The District Commissioners are "completely indifferent" to the problem thus created, Mrs. Boyle charged after Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen failed to give her committee an answer to the request District firemen and policemen be permitted to sell tickets to a benefit boxing show scheduled for October 12 in Griffith Stadium.

"With the $8,000 to $10,000 insured by the boxing match we could have started the school lunches going, possibly by Monday. Now we don't know when Commissioner

Modernization Of Waterfront Wins Approval

War Department, Budget Bureau Agree; D. C. to Pay in Installments.

An agreement for modernization of the Washington waterfront by War Department engineers was announced yesterday by Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, on receipt of a letter from Daniel W. Bell, acting budget director.

The plan, which has the approval of the War Department, calls for the District's payment of its share of the cost of the improvement on an instalment basis. The first payment of $88,000 will be provided in an estimate to be submitted to the Budget Bureau for inclusion in the first deficiency bill.

Army engineers engaged in drafting plans for Washington channel improvement told Col. Sultan they would be ready to start work early next spring, providing Congress appropriates funds.

Ultimate cost of the project to the District will be $389,000, under terms of the 1935 rivers and harbors act.

Last July the Commissioners submitted an estimate to the Budget Bureau for the full amount.

Waterfront improvement includes building of a yacht basin, municipal piers, replacement of the harbor police and fire headquarters and moving of the morgue.

Defunct Bank Wins Decree For $500,000

3 Quasi-Federal Agencies Ordered to Repay Commercial National.

A decree was signed yesterday by Justice Oscar R. Luhring under which three quasi-Government organizations will have to return approximately $500,000 to the defunct Commercial National Bank.

This was a victory for the 18,000 depositors of the bank, who will share in the money if the decision prevails. However, an appeal was in prospect last night.

The deposits involved were those of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Marine Fleet Corporation, the Alien Property Custodian and the Philippine-Manila Railway Co. When the Commercial closed, they demanded and were given 100 per cent of their deposits, while the rank and file of depositors had to take fractions.

On August 14, 1934, Thomas E. Rhodes, a depositor, filed suit to compel the quasi-Government organization to return 50 per cent of their deposits, charging that their collection in full was "unlawful, illegal and unconscionable."

Justice Luhring agreed that the quasi-Government organizations were not entitled to 100 per cent of their deposits.

Warden Hurt In Rebellion At Alcatraz

By the Associated Press.

San Francisco, Sept. 24.—A convict attack on Warden James A. Johnston today disclosed a new rebellion in Alcatraz Prison, island fortress where the Government keeps the most hardened criminals.

Burton Phillips, Kansas kidnaper and bank robber, slugged Johnston from behind as the warden passed through the prison dining room after interviewing 100 convicts confined to their cells because of a strike.

Phillips' swinging fists injured Johnston before guards could intervene. The warden was taken to the prison hospital, where Dr. George Hess reported no signs of skull fracture.

The prison did not disclose what disciplinary measures, if any, had been instituted against Phillips, who is serving a life sentence.

Other Prisoners Startled.

Johnston, noted for his discipline and his insistence upon anonymity as good medicine for bad men, had just interviewed the strikers in their cells. As he passed through the dining room where the other convicts were at the noon meal, Phillips arose and attacked him while other startled prisoners looked on. Johnston was injured on the head and face.

The warden was quoted as saying the strike probably was motivated by a mass desire for more privileges and more attention. Both are rare elements at Alcatraz. Prisoners may talk among themselves only during a short recreation hour each day; have no visitors and little or no entertainment. The so-called "big shots" are treated the same as the lowliest of the 300.

Struck in January.

In January, 1936, more than 100 convicts staged Alcatraz's first uprising. They refused to work. A dozen leaders were sent to the prison's dreaded solitary confinement cells and the rebellion quickly put down.

Justice Department officials expressed the belief that the newest Alcatraz explosion had been touched off by receipt of "grapevine" reports of last Sunday's uprising in Folsom Prison and the resultant death today of Warden Clarence Larkin.

Warden Johnston told the Justice Department the situation had been brought under control without violence and without use of firearms or tear gas. Alcatraz is heavily planted with remote control tear gas devices and other modern instruments for quelling riots.

The prison announcement of the assault said 100 of the 300 convicts had struck earlier in the week, refusing to work.

19 More Reds Die In Mass Execution

Moscow, Sept. 24 (AP).—Mass executions of spies and saboteurs on Far Eastern railways, accused of being in Japanese secret service pay, today claimed 19 more lives at Vladivostok, Russia's great Pacific seaport. The newspaper, Pacific Ocean Star, of Khabarovsk, Siberia, reported the newest batch of executions

In addition, the newspaper, Malot, reported, eight employes of the Millerovo Grain Supply Trust in the Azov-Black Sea province in sentenced to death on charges of deliberately spoiling grain.

Bombs Kill Women, Children In Hankow; Nanking Raided; Save Americans, Fleet Is Told

Navy Department Delays Publicity

Foe Using Gas, Dispatch Received by Chinese Embassy Charges.

By William V. Nessly.

Firm orders for the United States Asiatic fleet to protect Americans remaining in war-torn China, despite the "dangers" incident to such a course, have been given by Admiral Harry E. Yarnell, commander in chief of the fleet, it was revealed yesterday.

In a most unusual situation, involving what appeared to many to be a sudden change in this country's policy toward American nationals in China, the admiral's orders were not made public by the Navy Department until some 72 hours after they had been communicated to the officers of the fleet.

On September 5, aboard his yacht off Rhode Island, President Roosevelt declared Americans had been warned repeatedly to leave China, and those who had not heeded the warnings were remaining at their own risk.

"All Possible Protection."

"The policy of the commander-in-chief during the present emergency is to employ United States naval forces under his command so as to offer all possible protection and assistance to our nationals in cases where needed. Naval vessels will be stationed in ports where American citizens are concentrated and will remain there until it is no longer possible or necessary to protect them or until they have been evacuated.

"This policy, based on our duties and obligations, will be continued as long as the present controversy between China and Japan exists, and will continue in full force even after our nationals have been warned to leave China and after an opportunity to leave has been given.

"Most American citizens now in China are engaged in businesses or

Striking Workers Shy at Control of Knitting Factory

Los Angeles, Sept. 24 (AP).—The proposal of L. G. Griffith to turn over his $20,000 knitting mill, at no cost, to his striking employes, was up in the air tonight.

"Take it over and run it yourselves," Griffith told the strikers who walked out a week ago. "I'll buy the goods you make."

Three of the 55 strikers filed articles of incorporation and said they would operate the plant on a co-operative basis.

Two pickets at the factory said, however, that the proposal was "just an employer trick." "Griffith has to recognize the union before we make any deal," they said. The strikers are members of the United Ladies Garment Workers, C. I. O. affiliate.

Chiang Appeals for U. S. Aid, Says Neutrality Is Impossible

By the Associated Press.

Nanking, Sept. 24.—China's premier and army chieftain, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, today called on the United States to fulfill her treaty obligations by supporting "China's struggle against Japanese aggression."

A dramatic plea for aid and sanctity of treaties was made by the khaki-clad premier as his dynamic wife, head of the embattled nation's air force, ridiculed Japanese assertions that half of China's military planes have been destroyed by Japanese raiders.

"We have lost only a fraction of the 284 planes the Japanese claim to have shot down," declared American-educated Mme. Chiang, adding Chinese had downed 62 Japanese aircraft in the last two weeks of August alone, most of them within Chinese lines.

The generalissimo and his wife received American and other foreign correspondents in a place kept secret for fear of Japanese air attacks.

"America's responsibility in the present Sino-Japanese war is far greater than previously because she convened the Washington disarmament conference and was mainly instrumental in concluding the nine-power pact and the League of Nations covenant," the premier declared.

He said China's fight today is for the principles of that pact, guaranteeing territorial integrity of China, and the League covenant.

"Therefore it us up to the United States and other signers of existing agreements to support China's struggle," Chiang asserted, adding that "neutrality for the United States is impossible," as long as those international agreements remain in force.

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, Sept. 24.—The Spanish central government tonight disclosed the arrest of more than 200 persons accused of a "great plot" to overthrow the government. A communique said the plot centered at Madrid.

Officials said about 5,000 men planned to attack government forces from the rear in a combined civilian and military uprising. Another 2,500 persons, they stated, were to seize public buildings in Madrid.

A number of officers, soldiers and civilians were said to be implicated as ringleaders. Many were reported under arrest.

By the Associated Press.

Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 24.—Police tonight blamed "puppy love" and juvenile emulation of gangster tactics—with ice cream cones the "tribute"—for a schoolroom shooting which seriously wounded Miss June Mapes, gray-haired principal, and led her 12-year-old assailant to attempt suicide.

The boy, Robert Snyder, in Mercy Hospital with a self-inflicted wound, told Lieut. Ralph Murphy:

"I made up my mind to go home and get my father's gun. I intended to go to Miss Mapes' room, have her call Gloria Moore from class, and order her to drive us to an ice cream store and buy us ice cream cones.

"When she refused to call Gloria I became angry and fired at her."

Twelve-year-old Gloria, who sat two seats from the boy in study class, was in seclusion after telling police she and Robert were not particularly friendly. She put in a good word for him, though—she said he was bright in his classes.

Physicians meanwhile predicted Miss Mapes, 59, who suffered an abdominal wound, would recover. They said Robert also would live.

"I am satisfied the boy told the truth," Lieut. Murphy said. "He wanted only to demonstrate to pretty little Gloria Moore how tough he could be."

Playmates of Robert told Murphy he had been listening to radio programs concerning gangs and crime, and had been reading stories about bandits. The lieutenant said Robert "looked sheepish" when he denied writing in the dust on Miss Mapes' car:

"The Green Hornet—shot by me."

"The Hare."

Lieut. Murphy said the "Hornet" and the "Hare" are characters in a broadcast crime drama.

110 Poisoned as Bakery Sells Spoiled Eclairs; Police Find 300, Hunt Buyers of 1,400 More

Police reported 110 persons were recovering last night from acute food poisoning induced by eating spoiled chocolate eclairs after police had confiscated 300 eclairs issued by a local bakery and were looking for several hundred more.

Officials said that scores of other persons may be less severely ill, with their cases unreported.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland broadcast a warning to pastry makers against insanitary preparations as health department chemists examined the seized eclairs.

Dr. James G. Cumming, director of the bureau of preventable diseases, said he was convinced the eclairs caused the outbreak of food poisoning, although persons had been found who had eaten them without becoming ill, all those who were poisoned had eaten the contaminated pastry.

It was believed that the eclairs became spoiled because the bakery made them at night and delivered them the following morning without keeping them on refrigeration.

A total of 1,700 eclairs were issued by the bakery under suspicion, and only 300 were recovered by police.

The health department, co-operating with police, set to work early yesterday after getting reports of the poison cases and obtained samples of the pastries shortly after midnight.

Dr. Cumming explained that the poisoning was not severe enough to endanger any lives, but it made the victims violently ill.

"The health department wishes again to warn the pastry industry," Dr. Ruhland said, "that the egg filling requires the most scrupulous sanitary handling and if undertaken at all there cannot be a single slip in the observance of cleanliness of the utensils used, the person preparing it, or in the refrigeration of the product itself.

"The source of the outbreak will be determined and the nature of the organism will be revealed by the investigation, but more outbreaks will occur unless the pastry industry understands that these acute food poisonings are usually caused by bacteria which are 'virtually inoculated into the pastry filling through unclean methods and unclean utensils.'"

500 Dead and Hundreds Injured in '3 Cities;' Canton Suffers.

Paotingfu Seized, Tokyo Announces

The Sino-Japanese War.

The American naval commander in China, reversing the previous United States position, declared the Navy will protect Americans who remain in China.

The Japanese army announced it had captured Paotingfu, strong point of the defense system in North China, and annihilated its garrison.

Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, Chinese dictator, called on the United States to fulfill its obligation under the nine-power pact to protect the territorial integrity of China.

Nanking Bombed.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Saturday), Sept. 25.—Japanese air bombers renewed their raids on Nanking, China's capital, today.

Chinese asserted the city's strong antiaircraft defenses shot down four of a fleet of 36 planes that roared over Nanking before noon, ending the capital's respite from the Japanese aerial campaign to destroy it.

There were no immediate reports of casualties or damages.

A Japanese air fleet penetrated the heart of China yesterday to bomb the Wuhan cities, Hankow, Wuchang and Hanyang, leaving 500 dead and between 200 and 500 wounded.

Nearly all the victims were noncombatants, many of them women and children.

American and British gunboats were endangered as bombs fell near their berths in the Yangtze River, but as far as could be learned no foreigners were hurt.

Nine planes took part in the attack. The three cities, forming the commercial and industrial metropolis of central China, are 450 airline miles from Shanghai.

Besides the Wuhan cities, many other Chinese communities suffered heavily as the Japanese air raiders ranged far and wide. Canton, great metropolis of the south, was again attacked, but suffered little by comparison with the terrible raids of Wednesday and Thursday, in which thousands were killed or wounded.

Indignation was felt throughout China over reports the Japanese air forces had attacked Chufu, in Shantung Province, birthplace of China's great sage, Confucius, and one of the Orient's holy places.

On the battlefront above Shanghai the Japanese made slow progress in spite of the admitted landing of 40,000 fresh troops from Japan during the last week.

Cholera, which has visited Shanghai with the worst epidemic in its history, was taking toll of the Japanese forces. Some 200 Japanese soldiers were reported to have died of the disease in the Paoshan sector north of here, while 300 more were said to be ill.

Farley to Keep Post at Least Another Month Before Joining Pierce-Arrow

Auto Company Proffers Him Share in Firm

By Robert C. Albright.

Postmaster General James Aloysius Farley, who has two political jobs and wants to trade one of them for a career in business, is going to hang on to what he has for at least another month, his Post Office date book indicated yesterday.

Offer of an executive position with the Pierce-Arrow Motor Corporation has been an open secret for weeks, and it all narrowed down yesterday to when he will announce his decision.

That decision appeared to hinge on when and if the Securities and Exchange Commission registers a new $10,700,000 issue of Pierce-Arrow stock. The stock registration statement has not yet been filed, and the current unsettled condition of the stock market may delay it.

Resignation Rumors Frequent.

Farley's tour in the Cabinet has been dotted with rumors of resignation almost from the time he took office, but he has denied all previous reports. He has not denied this one, nor has he confirmed it. He has said simply, "No comment."

That he does not intend to be rushed was shown yesterday by speaking engagements as Postmaster General up until October 19. On that day he will address the National Association of Postmasters at San Francisco. He has made no promises after that date.

Speculation on how far ahead he has booked his official business was started yesterday on reports that he had moved up dedication of a Greenville, S. C., postoffice from late October to September 27.

But associates of Farley denied he had moved up the date. They say he has a number of Western postoffices to dedicate before and after he makes his San Francisco speech. On Tuesday of next week he will dedicate the $70,000 postoffice at Laurel, Md. No dates are being booked too far in advance.

The Pierce-Arrow Motor Corporation, reorganizing to enter the medium-priced automobile field, is said to have made its first offer to Farley in the spring. Plans for reorganization under "a person of national importance" went forward after favorable responses from Farley, and details of the new stock issue have been worked out. It was held unlikely Farley would announce his future connection until SEC had approved the issue.

Under the plan, Farley would retain his chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee, and probably his State chairmanship. The President has frowned for some time on dual office in Government and political organizations, and Farley himself, who is not wealthy, is said to have desired the break in his own interest.

No Longer Chief Adviser.

Added to this is the belief by some observers that Farley has not been for some time the President's No. 1 political adviser. The Postmaster General is said to have received his first word of the appointment of Senator Hugo Black to the Supreme Court when he read it on a news ticker, and there are said to be other important instances in which he was not taken into counsel.

Farley is a born salesman, and most of his private career, aside from politics, has qualified him for sales work and direction. So when he decided definitely last January to leave the Cabinet it was not unusual he specified sales in defining the sort of job he was looking for.

Farley is known to have received a number of offers in addition to the Pierce-Arrow proffer. One he turned down was the presidency of the Distilled Spirits Institute, at $100,000 a year, because he believed it would involve legislative contacts.

Once Sold Gypsum.

His private business experience dates from the time he traveled for a firm handling gypsum. For 20 years he was with the United States Gypsum Co. and was sales manager for the Universal Gypsum Co. at New York for a number of years.

In 1928 he founded James A. Farley & Co., Inc., dealers in mason materials, and in 1929 merged his firm with five other building material firms and organized the General Builders Supply Corporation, with offices at New York. He resigned as president and director before he entered the Cabinet in 1933.

Pierce-Arrow is said to be planning to launch a car in the $700 to $1,200 class, as well as higher-priced automobiles.

Reports are that Farley, if he clinches the contract, would receive 5,000 shares of the new stock, valued at $50,000, and a similar block of shares in his first share. His proposed salary is reported in the neighborhood of $50,000 a year.

Roper Sees Threat In New Invention

French Lick Springs, Ind., Sept. 24 (AP).—Secretary Roper urged a "coordination of mechanical and social engineering" tonight to keep the progress of invention from resulting in the "exploitation of human beings."

In an address in connection with the presentation of the annual awards in the American Trade Association executives' competition, he said the experience calls for research looking to "a better understanding of the procedure that must be taken in the future to shift the economic and social organization at the same time that we shift our technical procedures."

The first prize in the competition went to the National Lumber Manufacturers Association for its activities in the promotion of the building of small homes.

I. C. C. Gets Rail Plea.

By the Associated Press.

Institutional Investors, holding $80,000,000 of bonds of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co., asked the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday to reopen that carrier's reorganization proceedings. The group has decided to file a reorganization plan of its own.

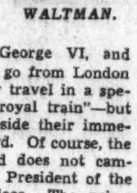
Roosevelt Has Larger Retinue on Westward Trip Than the King of England.

By Franklyn Waltman

EN ROUTE to Pacific Coast with President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Sept. 24.—No less interesting than a transcontinental trip of a President of the United States is the train on which he travels. It is purely an American institution, chiefly because there is no other country in the world like the United States.



WALTMAN.

When His Majesty, King George VI, and Queen Elizabeth go from London to Scotland, they travel in a special train—the "royal train"—but there is none beside their immediate party aboard. Of course, the King of England does not campaign, while the President of the United States does. The prime ministers of England and France, for instance, represent districts in their parliaments and do not make national campaigns. Thus there is no need for them to make nation-wide trips.

When the President of the United States and his wife decide to visit their grandchildren on the Pacific Coast—or to ascertain what the people on the plains and prairies are thinking—or to bring a little pressure on recalcitrant Senators—they cannot make the trip in privacy. Between 60 and 70 persons must go with them—and, all told, several thousand—perhaps 5,000—persons are directly concerned with their movements. Including railroad officials there are approximately 75 persons aboard this train at all times. Who are they? There are 16 persons in the immediate Presidential party, not including a retinue of Secret Service agents, the number of which cannot be revealed.

There are 22 newspaper correspondents, not including those local writers who climb aboard to ride 100 or 200 miles through their States. There are four radio broadcasters, two representatives of telegraph companies and eight motion picture and still camera photographers. In addition, there are a number of railroad officials who operate under the direction, on this train, of Ira G. Rasp, of the New York Central Railroad, on whose line the trip originated.

There are ten cars in this train. The last car, which has a large drawing room, an observation parlor, as well as a brass-railed inclosed platform, is the President's car. He and Mrs. Roosevelt each have a bedroom in that car. In that car Marvin H. McIntyre, White House secretary, and Henry M. Kannee, Mr. McIntyre's secretary, share a drawing room. In another compartment is Miss Marguerite LeHand, personal secretary to the President. Tommy Qualters, newly married personal bodyguard to the President, shares another compartment with a Secret Service agent.

Next to the President's private car is a compartment car in which other members of the immediate Presidential party live. Between the two cars barring entrance to the Presidential suite to unauthorized persons at all hours of the day and night, is a Secret Service man. Others in the immediate party are Col. Elward M. Watson, White House military aide; Dr. Ross T. McIntire, White House physician, and his assistant, Chief Pharmacist's Mate George A. Fox; Mrs. Malvina T. Scheider, Mrs. Roosevelt's personal secretary; Herbert Theurer, a postoffice inspector who has charge of all White House mail and directs its transmission to and from the train; Miss Nancy Cook, a close friend of Mrs. Roosevelt; the Misses Grace Tully (who once was a secretary to Cardinal Hayes of New York) and Roberta Barrows, White House stenographers, and Col. F. C. Harrington, of the WPA, who is along as a technical aide to the President.

In the next compartment car the Secret Service agents are quartered, along with an overflow from the regular cars for the newspaper correspondents. There are two such cars. There is a third compartment car for photographers and the radio men. There is a diner, changed whenever the train moves on to another railroad line. Then there is a regular Pullman car to take care of railroad officials and overnight guests; a club car and a combination Pullman and baggage car. In the latter the train personnel sleeps.

The President pays for his private car the equivalent of 20 regular railroad fares, plus a Pullman charge. This sum comes out of the $25,000 allowed him each year for traveling. The fares of the official party traveling outside of the President's car are paid out of the White House traveling expense fund. Officially they are "on Government business." The fares of the Secret Service agents are paid from their fund, a part of the Treasury's budget. Each newspaperman, photographer and radioman pays his own way—or has it paid for him by his office.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt always eat their meals in their private car, where there is a special kitchen and cook. It is always the same cook through whose life the Secret Service has gone with a fine-tooth comb. Indeed, the Secret Service has checked everyone aboard this train. For that reason the same train personnel—porters, waiters and conductors—always makes the trip with the President. For instance, Samuel Mitchell, the porter in one of the press cars, has had that assignment to the knowledge of this writer for the past eight years.

The President usually invites some of the members of his party and any distinguished guests, such as Senators and Governors, who have boarded the train—"visiting firemen" in the lingo of the press cars—to eat with him. The remainder of the party eats in the dining car and pays cash for its meals. The menu customarily is more fancy than on regular trains and some railroads have a spesial menu card printed noting the occasion and dates.

In the club car there is a shower bath and barber chair. The President uses the shower in his private car and is shaved, dressed and undressed by his colored valet, Irwin McDuffey, who always accompanies him. McDuffey, prominent in colored circles in Washington, might be called the Nation's "No. 1 valet."

When in motion the train is as quiet and colorless as any that crosses the country. The President is busy consulting with visitors in his private car or dictating to his secretaries. Other members of the party are engaged in their work, or relaxing in a game of cards or with a drink in the club car. Mr. Rasp technically is in charge of the train. He gets his orders from Mr. McIntyre, who says—sometimes after consulting the President—who may board the train, where it shall stop and for how long. Mr. Rasp passes these orders along to representatives of the particular railroad on which the train is traveling. It is when the train stops that it becomes a colorful spectacle.

Compartment doors fly open. Newspapermen hurry down aisles to the rear in order to see the crowd and hear what the President has to say. If they wish, they may sit in the dining car and hear his words from the rear platform over an inside-amplifying system. Secretary McIntyre gives his last instructions. The photographers drag out their cameras and quantities of flash bulbs. The motion picture men come out with their heavy and complicated sound-recording equipment only when the stop is prolonged.

Carleton D. Smith, National Broacasting announcer, and his technical assistant, A. E. Johnson, get their equipment and portable microphone ready for a quick broadcast. So do Sterling Fisher, director of talks for Columbia Broadcasting System and on this trip acting as an announcer and commentator, and his aide, Clyde M. Hunt.

C. S. Linkins and T. B. Bowen, representatives of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies, respectively, rush about the train gathering up the last pages of news stories and telegrams to be sent at the approaching station. The Secret Service agents under the direction of Russell Wood, appear from their cubby holes and gather to deploy around the rear of the train when it stops.

The train slides to an easy stop. Everyone seems to be trying to get off at once. Outside appear telephone officials with coils of wire and a portable telephone set. The latter is handed through a window. Within a minute Secretary McIntyre or Mr. Kannee is talking to Washington, issuing Presidential instructions or taking down a message from perhaps a Cabinet officer. Sometimes the president talks on the telephone.

The crowd gathers around the rear platform of the train. Hundreds of police push and shove back those who get too close. A Secret Service agent warns a spectator with a camera not to point it at the President. Other Secret Service agents who have been at the station several hours circulate through the crowd.

The President appears. There is a cheer. Mrs. Roosevelt, smilingly, comes out. Another cheer. Silence. The President commences talking. He expresses his pleasure at seeing so many happy faces. He is glad to be back here. Prosperity has come back to the country. Everybody is happy.

Secretary McIntyre gives a nod to Mr. Rasp. The latter raises his hand. The telephone wires are jerked out of the window. The train slowly starts moving. Everyone rushes to get on the train. The engine whistles and picks up speed. The train becomes quiet again as green and golden fields pass by under the window.

Illness Is Held Cause Of Stillman's Suicide

Prescott, Ariz., Sept. 24 (AP).—Despondency over a 15-year illness prompted Leland Stanford Stillman, 31, to take his own life, authorities decided today as members of his family, prominent in the East and California, hurried here.

Stillman's body was found yesterday near his ranch home, 40 miles northeast of her. Stillman's grandfather was among the founders of Leland Stanford University.

Housing Parley Warned of Plan To Kill Project

Obstacles in the way of administration of the Government's new $526,000,000 housing and slum clearance program loomed large at a conference of State and city housing officials here, opening yesterday. The conference, under auspices of the American Federation of Housing Authorities, will be concluded today.

Langdon Post, president of the federation, warned of attempts to be made to kill the housing act through amendments, and said numerous changes would be needed to make the law "work."

Miss Catherine Bauer, secretary of the Labor Housing Conference, predicted that within two years the country would face "the worst housing shortage" it had ever dealt with.

Law Called Stop-Gap.

Mayor Cornelius D. Scully, of Pittsburgh, contending the new law is only a "stop-gap," declared "we manufacture slums as fast as we clean them up."

John H. Fahey, chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, sought to prevent over-emphasis on publicly-financed housing.

"We should think also," he said, "of the people who need and want homes costing from $3,000 to $5,000 who have never got their money's worth. I think we are on the way to meet this need, despite rising costs in some directions."

The conference followed one held on Monday by Secretary of the Interior Ickes, at which inability of cities to provide the 10 per cent of the cost of projects, as provided under the law, was among points stressed. Remarks by Ickes at that time, in which he charged labor unions had combined with contractors in the PWA program to keep prices up, aroused considerable resentment among labor circles, especially in the American Federation of Labor.

Post, however, told yesterday's conference that "if it hadn't been for the American Federation of Labor we never would have got the bill through."

"The opposition to the law is not dead," Post said. "The United States Chamber of Commerce hasn't locked its doors yet." He declared some real estate interests "are going to watch every move in every city, and when they find mistakes are made they are going to shout about them."

He said it would be possible to show Congress points in which the law would not work, and expressed confidence that necessary amendments would be enacted.

State Laws Differ.

He disclaimed any intention to "dictate" to the housing administrator, yet to be appointed by President Roosevelt, but said the administrator couldn't "possibly know all the local obstacles and legal hurdles to be jumped" in various cities.

"Some can give tax exemption and some can't," he added. "Some can condemn, but in some States it's a question whether they can. Some cities are beyond their debt limit and can't borrow any more; some have charters which don't permit them to give money for such a purpose."

He called for co-operation with the administrator in getting around such difficulties.

Lawyer Asks FPC Not to Disbar Him

By the United Press.

C. E. Paxson, of New York, attorney for seven officers of Associated Gas & Electric subsidiaries who asked permission to hold interlocking directorates, yesterday asked dismissal of a citation to disbar him from practice before the Federal Power Commission.

Paxson's citation occurred after the seven officers withdrew their application three days before scheduled hearings. Commission Chairman Frank R. McNinch commented that the withdrawal was "significant" and said the Federal Power Commission planned to take vigorous action to eliminate interlocking directorates in accordance with the utility holding company act of 1935.

Paxson issued a statement in reply which Clyde L. Seavy, Federal Power Commission vice chairman, interpreted as "an attempt to impugn the integrity of the commission," and which resulted in the citation ordering him to show cause why he should not be disbarred before the Federal agency.

Russia Hampers U. S. Wheat Sale

By the Associated Press.

Russia ranked as a "dark horse" yesterday in a forecast of world wheat trade this season.

Government grain experts said uncertainty as to how much wheat the Soviet government will sell the world this season has tended to restrict European purchases of surplus wheat available in the United States.

Russian exports in recent years have varied from almost no wheat to as high as 40,000,000 bushels.

Domestic grain trade experts have attributed a downward trend in world wheat prices in recent months to offerings of Russian wheat. The Liverpool quotations on the Russian grain have averaged 5 cents a bushel under a comparable grade of wheat from the United States.

Good Wages Are Called More Vital Than Profits

Chicago, Sept. 24 (AP).—Secretary of Labor Perkins told salesmen of the Continental Assurance Co. today "profits are of vital importance to industry, but good and steady wages for workers and fair prices for the produce of farmers are necessary to a sound and lasting prosperity."

Enactment of Federal legislation on wages and hours, Miss Perkins said in a prepared address, would assist stabilization of industry and lessen the danger of another depression.

Zoo Ship Reaches N. Y. Today; One Giraffe Named for Nicky

Dr. Mann to Give Radio Account of Voyage; 9-Year-Old Editor Honored for His Drive to Get Animals.

By Gerald G. Gross

A Staff Correspondent.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 24.—Dr. William M. Mann's floating zoo was scheduled to arrive in New York tomorrow with its cargo of strange animals and birds destined for Washington Zoo, following a brief stop here today.

Although their sea days were almost over, the animals may not touch dry land until Monday morning. But the frequent storms of their voyage from Sumatra were far behind as the freighter Silverash coasted down from Halifax, N. S., under clear weather.

Dr. Mann will come ashore tomorrow to give a brief radio talk, which will be broadcast in Washington over Station WMAL, in which he will tell of the task of bringing the animals together and caring for them aboard ship.

Among the most delicate of his charges were the giraffes, which Dr. Mann left nameless until he could be sure they would reach the United States. When the Silverash reached Halifax, one giraffe was named Nicky in honor of 9-year-old Nicky Arundel, editor of Nicky's News, who led a nine-month editorial fight to get giraffes for the Zoo.

Mrs. Mann, dietician for the animals, said today her job of catering to the appetites of gibbon apes, hornbills, and others had become easier since the ship reached land. The snakes, among them two large cobras obtained from a native boy for tobacco, continued to eat lightly.

The bird shipment includes two shoebill storks, from Egypt; three Maleo fowl, noted for their huge eggs, and several Birds of Paradise.

The Komodo lizard, which broke from its crate during the voyage and endangered the lives of the rare birds, was cheered with a whole fresh duck, apparently its first satisfying meal in more than a month.

Klan and Court Incompatible, Nation Thinks

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Sept. 24.—As Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black sails homeward across the Atlantic to face the storm over his alleged connection with the Ku Klux Klan, first incomplete returns of a Nation-wide poll indicate a majority of voters believe a man who has been a Klan member should not serve on the United States Supreme Court.

The poll, conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion, asks, "If a man has been a member of the Ku Klux Klan, should this bar him from serving as a Supreme Court judge?"

Incomplete results to date show the vote running approximately 6 to 4 in the affirmative. Final returns will not be ready for publication until Sunday, October 3.

Because Justice Black has offered no statement since the Klan issue was raised by the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, only one side of the case has been presented. The justice is scheduled to arrive in Baltimore September 30.

The American Institute poll was started a few days after the Pittsburgh paper began publishing a series of articles on Black's alleged Klan connections.

Conducted along methods tested and found reliable in the last Presidential election, the survey covers a complete cross-section of the population—rich and poor, urban and rural, Democrat and Republican, old and young, in all States.

The Institute is asking two other questions:

1. When President Roosevelt appointed Senator Black to the Supreme Court, did you approve of the appointment?

2. Should Justice Black resign from the Supreme Court if it is proved that he has been a member of the Ku Klux Klan?

Up-to-date returns in the poll will be published exclusively in the Washington area in The Washington Post on October 3.

Experts Draft New Tax Plan To Aid Business

Program to Contribute Materially to Stability, Treasury Says.

By the Associated Press.

Treasury officials predicted yesterday that a new tax program being drafted will contribute materially to business stability.

Tax experts working under the direction of Roswell Magill, Treasury Undersecretary, expect to complete recommendations for revamping the revenue structure by November. Their suggestions then will be laid before Congressional committees.

Officials said the entire field of Federal taxation is being explored with a view to formulating a long-range system which can continue from year to year without material change. The program will be so designed as to permit rate changes to meet varying economic conditions without changing the form of taxation, they added.

Authorities said attention is being given to business criticisms of the present tax structure. This week the taxation committee of the American Institute of Accountants declared that, while business can adjust itself to varying tax rates, it must have "reasonable assurance of the character and basis" of taxation.

The committee asserted Federal taxation had become a "bugaboo of corporate planning."

Treasury spokesmen reported that a thorough study is being made of the undisturbed profits tax on corporations.

Officials said the rates, ranging from 7 to 27 per cent of undistributed profits, are being studied to determine "whether they are too high or too low."

Senator Davis Leaves G.O.P. State Committee

Altoona, Pa., Sept. 24 (AP).—Senator James J. Davis (Republican), Pennsylvania, confirmed reports tonight that he had resigned from the Republican State committee and referred to published hints that he was organizing an independent movement in Pennsylvania by asserting:

"I have always been an independent."

The Senator disclosed his resignation formally in an address before the State Home Rule Association on the eve of the State committee meeting.

Public Leaders Will Advise on Jobless Census

Farm, Industry and Labor to Be Represented at Parley Monday.

By the Associated Press.

The Administration called on leaders in industry, agriculture and labor yesterday for advice on how to run the forthcoming unemployment census.

John D. Biggers, census director, said he and other Government officials would meet with a private advisory group at the White House Monday afternoon to discuss the voluntary count, which is scheduled to be completed by December 1.

The conference will go over a tentative draft of the unemployment questionnaire which will be distributed to the Nation's 31,000,000 families by the Postoffice Department.

It is hoped, Biggers said, that the questionnaire can be limited to 14 simple queries. It will seek information on unemployment, partial unemployment and unemployment where persons are unable to work.

Data also will be sought on whether unemployed persons "want work and are seeking work."

Asked whether the count might be distorted by registration by housewives or others who are not technically unemployed but would like to have jobs, he replied:

"We have a series of checks which will tend to eliminate inaccuracies—particularly those which might result from any attempts to 'pad' the registration."

The chiefs of the rival labor camps—President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization—were designated to attend the conference along with A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Agricultural and industrial representatives were listed as follows:

D.C. Contractor Asserts Robber Hid in His Car

Abducted After Leaving Bank on Sept. 15, He Informs Son.

Arthur G. Brinkley, 47-year-old painting contractor whose disappearance September 15 had given rise to fears for his life, walked into his home at 5514 First street northwest yesterday noon and told his family of being kidnaped near an Arlington bank and robbed by a group of colored men.

Tired, unshaven and in a state of mental confusion, he was unable to give a rational account of what happened following that Wednesday morning when he was last seen, members of the family said. He furnished them a detailed story of the Arlington abduction, however, before being taken to the Homeopathic Hospital for rest and observation.

According to Gorman Brinkley, his 21-year-old son, the contractor wired them of his impending return Thursday night from Laurinburg, N. C. Yesterday he could not recall, nor was he able to tell how he got home. Tucked in a torn trouser cuff was the $120 which he had managed to hide from his alleged robbers.

Son Relates Story.

He left the Arlington bank about 10 a. m. September 15, carrying loose in his pocket the $282 for which he had just cashed a check and which he was to have used in paying employes on construction projects in Arlington County.

He had another errand to do in the vicinity, but as his car was double-parked he started to drive it around the block in search of a parking place. Just then he felt a nudge at his back and turned to see an armed man whom he did not recognize crouching in the rear of the car. Apparently the man had entered the automobile while Brinkley was in the bank, his son said.

The stranger said to him, "Keep on driving!" and demanded his billfold. Brinkley handed him the purse, in which he had not yet placed the money. They drove to a country road (presumably Kirkwood road, between the Lee highway and Washington boulevard, where Brinkley's car was found the next morning).

Here the man told him to stop and threw something over Brinkley's head. A second automobile pulled up and several other colored men joined the first one. They led Brinkley into a field, removed his trousers and searched him. He had previously thrust $120 (two $50 and one $20 bills) into a hole in his pants cuff but the men took the remainder from him. He heard one say, "I thought there would be more."

The search over, the men shoved him into the back seat of the other car. From then on his account grows confused. A bruise and cut on his head led his family to believe he was struck and knocked unconscious.

He tells vaguely of having visited Staunton, Charlottesville and Luray, Va. In Staunton, where he once made his home, he said he met people on the street whom he knew. He gave a rambling account of having sold tobacco, shucked corn and been pestered by shoe-shine boys. He displayed a dollar bill which he said he earned shucking corn.

Under Doctor's Care.

The night before his return, he said, he rode around in a lumber truck. He seems unaware of any lapse of time since he left home, according to his family, referring to all his wanderings as having taken place "yesterday" or "last night."

He was wearing the same clothes as when he left except for a different pair of socks. He had acquired a hat which "belongs to somebody else" to replace the cap he left in his abandoned car.

According to Dr. R. B. Thibadeau, brain specialist who is attending him, Brinkley's case is not primarily mental. The ailing man responded normally to preliminary mental tests. The doctor told Mrs. Brinkley that a toxic condition may be the cause of her husband's mental confusion and plans further examination at the hospital.

Dr. Thibadeau is convinced Brinkley did not suffer concussion of the brain. Concussion would have resulted in prostration, which in turn would have attracted the attention of police or others to the man's plight, he said. He admitted the possibility of amnesia.

Alleged Pickpocket Held on 53d Charge

With a record of 52 arests, Abraham Miller, 35, of Aberdeen, N. Dak., was arrested for the fifty-third time late Thursday. Police said he is a well-known pickpocket, although never apprehended before in Washington.

Lieut. John Fowler arrested him at the regatta celebration. He was taken to the First Precinct Station and held on an open charge.

Mary Warburton Took Fatal Dose, Police Find

New York, Sept. 24 (AP).—Detective Lieut. Martin Owens said today his investigation into the death of Mary Brown Warburton led him to believe the narcotic found in her body was self-administered. Miss Warburton, prominent in New York's social set, was found unconscious in her apartment September 14 and died the same day.

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 24 (AP).—A plan of peaceful picketing was adopted tonight by 12,000 truck drivers who struck for higher pay today, sharply curtailing trucking activities in nine upstate New York cities and intervening rural areas. The strike was called in Syracuse after six weeks of wage negotiations ended in a deadlock. New York State police reported no acts of violence.

Plans to Speed District Traffic Almost Ready

Changes in Three Circles, Express Highways Are Proposed.

Plans to combat Washington's traffic problem with an improved and modernized system of highways were outlined yesterday at a meeting of the American Automobile Association's advisory board.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, described his $20,000,000 long-range construction program, explaining changes and suggested improvements.

"Plans for re-designing Scott, Thomas and Dupont Circles," he said, "are practically complete. Estimates are ready and we are going to recommend that this work be done in 1939.

"Also," Capt. Whitehurst continued, "plans are nearly ready for a by-pass express highway to relieve Georgetown traffic congestion from Key Bridge to M street."

John Nolan, jr., director of planning for the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, told of a proposed drive connecting principal residential sections surrounding Rock Creek Park.

"Washington has potential parkway possibilities equal to or better than any city in the United States," he said, "but it is my opinion that we are way behind what other cities of comparable size have done in this direction."

A projected highway—to be known as Fort Drive—which would encircle the District highlands, connect forts and tie the entire park system together was described by Nolan.

2 Hit by Trucks

Police said the truck was driven by Howard McReynolds, colored, 43, of 1300 block of Corcoran street northwest, who was not held. Nickel was taken to Casualty Hospital and treated for bruises and shock.

Samuel Buonria, 56, of 637 Florence street northeast, suffered a possible fractured skull, fractured ribs and internal injuries when a District of Columbia Surface Department truck ran over him in the 5000 block of Lowell street northwest.

Police said the driver, Jacob W. Pence, 49, 1304 Sixth street southwest, was backing in the middle of the street. Buonria was taken to Emergency Hospital.

Garr Brothers Free on Bond In Revenge Killing of General

Bail $20,000 for Two Who Shot at Denhardt, Alleged Slayer of Their Sister; Third Kinsman Released for $10,000.

By the Associated Press.

Shelbyville, Ky., Sept. 24.—The three brothers of Verna Taylor were held to the grand jury tonight on charges of killing Brig. Gen. Henry H. Denhardt the night before his second trial for murdering their society-beauty sister, but County Judge H. F. Walters released them on bond.

Roy Garr, 46, who took all the blame for Denhardt's death in his testimony at today's examining trial, and Dr. E. S. Carr, 38, who admitted he fired two shots, were freed on bonds of $20,000 each.

Jack, their 37-year-old brother, whom they testified was disarmed when they met the general and shot him down, was released on $10,000 bond.

"Roy swore he shot because he was afraid the war veteran would kill him.

"I saw Denhardt go for his right hip and, by God, I went for my gun," Roy, a farmer and bird dog fancier, testified. "I was scared and I started shooting and I didn't stop until I had emptied my gun."

Roy said he had heard that Denhardt planned to intimate he had been at a hotel with Mrs. Taylor. He was "outraged" at the thought of a slur being cast on her name," went wild," he said. "I saw a vision of my dead sister and I went toward them (Denhardt and his attorney) fast and I went shooting."

Roy denied that he fired a "coup de grace" bullet into the prostrate general's head.

Jack Garr, according to testimony, was not armed. Dr. Garr, named by Rodes K. Myers, one of Denhardt's lawyers as having pointed a pistol at Myers, testified he shot twice but did not know whether he had hit Denhardt.

Myers was guarded by two State policemen. He asked for them after he said he got letters threatening his life.

Jesse Denhardt, brother, and Miss Martha Denhardt, sister, of the dead man, remained at their home in Bowling Green, Ky. They issued a statement declaring they would leave it to the Commonwealth to prosecute the Garrs.

"After much thought and prayer, we have determined that is not our responsibility," they said in a statement published in their newspaper, the Bowling Green Times-Journal.

When 50 policemen attending the Maryland University traffic school launched their investigation of a hypothetical "hit-and-run accident" yesterday, residents of Calvert avenue in College Park were nearly thrown into panic.

The stage was set in advance. Broken fragments of glass, skid marks and other bits of "evidence" necessary to a good hit-skip crash were strewn about the scene.

In a university classroom, the officers were given final instructions and turned loose. In 20 cars and a cloud of dust they arrived to "investigate."

As it happened, the "accident" occurred near a school house. Several youngsters were playing nearby. The excitement was too much for their imaginations. Word soon spread around the neighborhood that "three people had been killed."

Frantic mothers ran from front yards, back yards, porches and kitchens. They saw a Maryland State Police car. They saw men bending over a spot in the road. Out of breath, the school teacher arrived. She started counting noses among the youngsters present.

A few zealous policemen began knocking on front doors to question "witnesses." A few others began looking under hedges and porches. Alarm spread like wildfire.

But then came explanations. Everything was all right, mothers and spectators were told. It was just part of a policeman's education.

The sight of a young girl lying in the road, however, didn't help to satisfy residents of Calvert avenue—until they learned she was Sugar Langford, of 7701 Georgia avenue, a Maryland coed who agreed to pose for photographers.

Back in class, the student policemen turned in reports on what they saw and from descriptions of the "hit-skip" car and driver, Dean S. S. Steinberg, of the College of Engineering, was named as the culprit. Capt. M. D. Smith, traffic division commander, was given credit for the "solution."

Earlier in the day, James M. Hepbron, consultant of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, assailed favoritism and laxity in traffic prosecutions during a lecture to the students.

He also stressed courtesy as an important item in police efficiency. The motoring public, he added, has a "natural resentment" toward authority and the individual policeman, through his manner of handling cases, can overcome this problem.

He outlined modern methods of preventing accidents through accurate reporting and cautioned policemen not to overlook the smallest detail while investigating a mishap.

During the noon recess, members of the class—including seven Washington policemen—were given an opportunity to inspect the new Maryland State police "crash car." Used exclusively in accident work, the car is equipped with first aid and scientific investigation apparatus—including cameras, tape lines, flares, etc.

U.S. Unworried By Paris-Lisbon Air Base Fight

By the Associated Press.

Government aviation officials appeared unconcerned yesterday over reports Portugal had refused France permission to use the Azores as a base for a projected transatlantic service.

American interests, they said, were "well taken care of" by the agreement with Great Britain under which American and British planes already have started test flights.

Informed officials said this Government had deferred action on German and French requests for a similar agreement, pending further experience with the transatlantic service.

Test flights by German and French planes were made this year under special limited agreements permitting use of American terminal facilities.

The Anglo-American agreement, providing at the outset for two round trips weekly by both Pan-American Airways and Imperial Airways, in addition to more frequent flights between New York and Bermuda, promises to meet American requirements indefinitely, it was said in responsible Government quarters.

If arrangements like that with Great Britain are made with the other governments, officials predicted they will be based on the same principle of reciprocity, whereby the United States, providing at least half of the mail, cargo and passenger traffic, handles half the traffic in American aircraft.

Last summer's transatlantic test flight made by a French plane made use of the Azores as well as Bermuda. The Germans, in test flights made by the Nordwind and the Nordmer, touched the Azores but made use of the surface mothership as bases the rest of the way.

The two test flights across the alternate southern route by Pan-American planes were both via Bermuda and the Azores. Most of the Pan-American-Imperial airways flights, however, have been by the shorter northern route between Newfoundland and the British Isles.

New York Seizes Pastry Racketeer

New York, Sept. 24 (AP).—Reaching across the continent in his campaign against crime, Special Rackets Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey announced tonight that Max Silverman, 46, whom he once described as one of New York's major racketeers, has been arrested at Los Angeles.

Already under indictment on a charge of obstructing justice in Brooklyn's Drukman murder case, Silverman was indicted again in January, as the result of a Dewey investigation, for alleged conspiracy in the New York pie and pastry racket. He was a fugitive since December, 1935.

He disappeared soon after Dewey began investigating the Flour Truckmen's Association, of which Silverman was the founder. He was accused of conspiring to wreck the businesses of pie and pastry bakers.

Scientists to Study Second 'Sky Isle'

Grand Canyon, Ariz., Sept. 24 (AP). Hazardous crag and chasm confronted an advance party of expert mountain climbers and packers today as it surveyed a trail to the precipitous heights of Wotan's Throne—next objective of Dr. Harold E. Anthony, mammalogy curator of the American Museum of Natural History.

Dr. Anthony, still atop the "lost world" of Shiva Temple, is completing his collection of mammals, which already numbers more than 100. It includes rare fauna and definite archaeological indications that Indians once used the "island in the sky" as a hunting ground.

Three Agencies Join Forces in Vigilante Probe

Working in collaboration with the Justice Department and the National Labor Relations Board, the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee has turned its attention to the reported spread of vigilante organizations in the East, West and South, it was learned yesterday.

For the time being, at least, the committee has stopped its investigation of Ford labor policies, in order to release its investigators for other work. The three groups have been quietly studying so-called vigilante activities for some time, and committee hearings are expected to open on return of Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., from Europe.

Senate investigators are concentrating on complaints received from the South, involving alleged intimidation by so-called law-and-order groups. It was said yesterday the inquiry may extend into reports that the Ku Klux Klan is attempting revival.

Justice Department Aids.

The coming sequel to the committee's investigation last session into labor espionage methods is expected to be also based on findings in a series of Labor Board hearings now under way, involving alleged vigilante activities in the industrial East and the agricultural West. These include inquiries by the board at Johnstown, Pa., Elkland, Pa., and in some California fruit-growing sections.

The Justice Department has been following up the La Follette committee's Harlan County, Ky., intimidation exposures of last year. A conspiracy statute, on the books for more than 50 years but never used, will be invoked to charge several members of the Harlan County Coal Operators Association with conspiring to deny citizens their civil rights.

The La Follette committee is following the course of the Harlan County legal action, and also is ready to proceed on a basis of the Labor Board's findings in other sections if further investigation is found necessary, it was said.

To Probe Killing.

Close co-operation with the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Labor Board was made possible by authority voted the La Follette group to borrow the services of investigators in the employ of executive agencies. La Follette was given an appropriation of $35,000 to continue the committee's work.

Although the La Follette group had dropped at least temporarily its Ford labor inquiry, the Labor Board is proceeding with this investigation.

Railroads Lay Off Thousands As Costs Rise

By the Associated Press.

Major railroads disclosed yesterday they are laying off thousands of employes. The move, they said, was necessitated by higher operating and maintenance costs.

The disclosure was made when railroad executives gathered here for the monthly meeting of directors of the Association of American Railroads.

The A. A. R. made public weekly statistics which showed that carloadings from January 1 through September 18 totaled 28,198,399 cars or almost 3,000,000 over the 25,366,300 loaded in the comparable period in 1936.

Nevertheless rail officials insisted that although business this year is improved over 1936, costs have gone up and the carriers are losing a substantial part of their proportionate share to trucks and other transportation.

It was pointed out that in 1930, which the carriers consider as offering the best "average figure" in the last decade, 34,203,038 cars were loaded through September 18.

Discussions revealed that three large eastern carriers—the Pennsylvania, the New York Central and the Baltimore and Ohio—had laid off approximately 20,000 employes since the first of this month.

Other rail heads acknowledged reduced payrolls, but emphasized that a part of this reduction was seasonal because maintenance programs are approaching completion.

All declared that increased passenger fares and a boost in freight rates are the only solution to their problem. The consensus, however, was that no definite step in this direction should be taken until the pending petition before the Interstate Commerce Commission for higher rates on selected commodities is acted upon.

Embassy Seeks Bode Executor

The Germany Embassy last night reported they had as yet received no answer from telegrams to Adolph Meyer, of Uelzen, Germany, executor of the will of Herman Bode, 72-year-old victim of amnesia who died in Gallinger Hospital last week.

Bode left about $18,000 in securities, checked at the Union Station, and had approximately $1,500 in his pockets when picked up by police as he wandered aimlessly about Washington three weeks ago.

Embassy officials said that they had wired Meyer, but could not find addresses for the beneficiaries, a brother, sister-in-law and two neices, all of Germany. Bode's body was still at the District morgue yesterday, where it will remain for another week unless claimed.

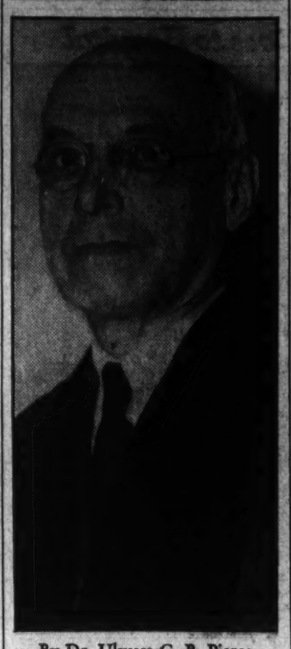
'Reality' Will Be Subject In Scientist Churches

"Reality" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow. The Golden Text is from Psalms 119:89: "For ever, O, Lord, Thy Word is settled in Heaven."

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." (Revelation 21:4).

The Lesson-Sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "We can become conscious here and now, of a cessation of death, sorrow and pain. This is indeed a foretaste of absolute Christian Science. Take heart, dear sufferer, for this reality of being will surely appear some time and in some way. There will be no more pain, and all tears will be wiped away."

Today's Sermon



By Dr. Ulysses G. B. Pierce.

Pastor, All Souls' Church, Unitarian.

According to an ancient legend, Mohammed was once visited by the angel Gabriel who deftly opened his breast, removed his heart, took it to the babbling spring of Zemzem where some tiny black specks were washed away, and then returned it to the breast of Mohammed. Who of us does not have such black specks on his heart—some inherited, perhaps, some acquired, some of which we are aware, some which we need to have brought to our attention. And while for us, there is no babbling spring of Zemzem, each of us may, through the cleansing power of religion, be made whole again. For religion was born of the passion of mankind to find something to set opposite these inherited and acquired tendencies. Its universal prayer has ever been, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." Steadily but powerfully, without regard to class, creed or color, with the help of all the arts—architecture, music, painting, poetry, drama—it comes into our lives to combat our pettiness, our animalism, our stand-pat wisdom, our complacency and if we will but give it a chance it will take our heart from our bosom, wash it clean, and restore it to us, as Gabriel restored the heart of Mohammed.

A Childish Undertaking.

The proposed voluntary registration of the unemployed will not cost over $5,000,000, and its newly appointed administrator, John D. Biggers, "hopes to spend a great deal less." That attitude is welcome, for it is all too probable that every dollar spent in this undertaking will prove to be a dollar wasted.

The mail-registration method adopted affords the easiest, cheapest and most expeditious way of complying with the law, and Mr. Biggers is to be congratulated on choosing the questionnaire procedure. It will not produce reliable results but has important negative virtues. The questionnaire system will require very little outside assistance and will not interfere seriously with the important routine work of either the Census Bureau, the Central Statistical Board or the United States Employment Service.

As a part of the necessary promotion for the scheme Mr. Biggers asserts that an effective voluntary census "would be a great demonstration of the soundness of our democracy." Just why that is so he does not explain, and it is impossible to share his optimism as to the results.

To expect anything approximating 100 per cent co-operation from the people of any country in an undertaking that offers them no assurance of even indirect benefit is to expect the impossible. A voluntary census will inevitably be defective because a large percentage of the unemployed will not respond unless registration is linked with some tangible reward or penalty. And among those who do answer, a staggering number of defectively filled questionnaires is to be expected, the more so if the forms are as complicated as they must be to secure information of any value.

Other inaccuracies in the self-census method will soon become apparent. There are unemployables who mistakenly believe that they are capable of earning a living. There are competent unemployed persons who have no desire or intention of working but who delude themselves into believing that they are in search of jobs. There may even be mischiefmakers, who, out of sheer desire to cause trouble, will declare themselves unemployed when they are not.

When the count is completed, therefore, it will be padded without being comprehensive. Nobody will know either how many failed to register or how many registered who should not have done so. And no check on these certain inaccuracies is possible.

It is just possible that the number improperly registered will approximately balance the number who fail to sign up. But we shall never know whether this is so. If fact, the whole so-called census could be regarded as a costly joke except for the fact that some will seek to draw conclusions of policy from its inevitably unreliable returns.

A Justified Bonus.

There can be no criticism of the decision of the Maritime Commission to pay a bonus to seamen on Government-operated merchant ships entering designated "danger zones." It follows naturally on the recent warning of the Navy Department defining such zones, both in Spanish and Chinese waters.

It seems probable, moreover, that the individual bonus of $50 per voyage, as decreed by the Maritime Commission, will also be granted by private companies operating ships in these zones. The seamen's unions have made a strong demand for this form of gratuity and the private operators have given the impression that they will be willing to abide by whatever decision the Government agency deems appropriate to the circumstances.

The figure approved by the Maritime Commission is only a fraction of the $250 bonus asked by the organized seamen. And the discrepancy is even more pronounced when it is realized that sailors on Government-operated ships have special insurance protection. But there are offsetting circumstances which seem to make the $50 figure reasonable for general application.

In the first place, Government action already taken practically rules ships carrying active munitions out of both war zones, thus limiting the risk of any American ship being intentionally attacked in these areas. In the second place, the aftermath of the Nyon accord seems to have greatly reduced the risk to neutral shipping in the Mediterranean. Finally, the bonus originally asked would only have resulted in keeping ships in port, which was not the real intent of its sponsors.

When there is war there is always some risk. It was the duty of the Maritime Commission, entrusted with protecting the interests of American seamen as well as operators, to take cognizance of this fact for Government shipping. In so doing it has given a clear lead to private operators.

Except for the desirability of correlating this step with general policy in the Far Eastern crisis, it would probably have been taken more quickly by the Maritime Commission. There is, of course, no antagonism between the bonus and the developing policy of the Department of State in the Far Eastern crisis. But it may be presumed that the action was not taken without Secretary Hull's prior knowledge.

Fixing A Minimum Wage.

A conference group consisting of representatives of employers, employes and the public, as well as members of the District Minimum Wage Board, is now holding hearings preliminary to restoring a minimum-wage scale for women employed in local retail establishments.

A great deal of preliminary investigation into living costs of women workers has already been undertaken for the enlightenment of the conference by employer organizations, by representatives of the workers and by the Minimum Wage Board itself. This material will afford a basis for discussion and should greatly assist the conferees in determining the wages required to cover decent living costs and maintain an unattached woman worker in good health.

There is, naturally, a wide gap between the weekly budget estimates submitted by the employers' delegation and the workers' delegation. The former conclude that a single woman can live under wholesome conditions for the sum of $14.57 per week. The employe representatives estimate essential living costs at $21.51 per week. The figure set for retail establishments by the old Minimum Wage Board, which ceased to function after the law creating it was declared unconstitutional in 1923, was placed at $16.50. Today it is estimated that probably 45 per cent of this group of workers earns less than that minimum—some of them much less.

There is no absolute standard by which to decide whether a given wage is adequate. To a large extent it is necessarily a matter of judgment. Moreover, in administering minimum wage laws two objectives have to be kept in mind. While the law aims to raise the standard of pay for the lowest groups, it is also essential to avoid increases so pronounced that they might result in wholesale dismissals of workers. That is why it is very important to work out schedules in consultation with all interested groups.

But, given reasonable good will on both sides, it should not be difficult to effect a scientific compromise between the varying budgets now submitted. There are many employers in the District paying fair wages who are glad to co-operate in plans for raising rates of remuneration. They are handicapped by the competition of establishments paying subnormal wages and prevented from being as generous as they would like to be in dealing with their own employes. Their advice and counsel are valuable, just as their support will be essential to enforcement of the law after orders have been issued.

Already 22 States have minimum wage laws, related in most cases to living costs. The District has the advantage of their experience to draw from, as well as the guidance afforded by some years of operation under the law which has been so long inoperative. Washington occupies a position of growing importance as the Capital of the country and it should go forward as a progressive community, setting an example for others to follow. There is no better guarantee of continued progress than that afforded by a decently paid, hence adequately maintained, working group.

The local Minimum Wage Board has launched its campaign in a very thorough and businesslike manner, wisely concentrating upon the retail trades, which cover a very large proportion of all the workers covered by the law.

The conference is handicapped by lack of data as to the actual numbers employed by local industries and the conditions under which they live—whether as part of a family group or unattached. All this information, however, should gradually be assembled as inquiries proceed. Publicity of this sort will not only assist successful administration of the law. It will help to eliminate the abuses of exploitation merely by uncovering them.

Plea To Philologists.

We solicit the aid of our scholarly readers, especially those skilled in the science of comparative philology, in deciphering a text which, we confess, has stumped us completely. It appeared recently in the New Statesman and Nation, of London. The editors, it seems, had invited their readers to express a particular loathing for some acknowledged master of English literature. Out of numerous manuscripts submitted they selected for the prize the following:

> If Henry James ever keeps a speak, I am not one of his customers. I am a guy that reads more than somewhat, but Henry's merchandise is harder to take than Good Time Charlie's. And I don't mean maybe. Indeed, if I see one of Henry's tales coming I haul off and walk away, because he is a guy from whom I get no literary scratch. I never give the large hello to the guys or dolls in his pieces. They have too much tongue, and however long they snow I cannot get their drift, so what's the use of me going around with them? I will only wish to poke them in the smush . . .

There is more of it, but we forbear to quote further. Our first thought was that some ambitious Englishman is attempting to emulate our Miss Gertrude Stein by seeking to arrange certain common English words in a sequence that deprives them not only of meaning but of any suggestion of meaning—a very difficult art, as all who try it soon discover. Even Miss Stein, an admitted genius, has been able to achieve it only by a certain reiterative technique called, we believe, echolalia. Thus a wonderfully lucid statement like "a rose is a rose" can be rendered utterly opaque by making it read "a rose is a rose is a rose."

But there is nothing like this in the passage we have quoted. There is a syntax that defies all analysis. For instance, in the subjunctive clause in the first sentence the verb "speak" is given the function of a noun and made the object of the transitive verb "keep." To "keep a speak" might possibly be construed to mean "to talk continuously," but this interpretation is in obvious conflict with the reference to "too much tongue" farther down in the text. Also "keeping a speak" is suggested merely as a possible contingency, whereas "too much tongue" is referred to as an evil already endured.

The last sentence quoted is perhaps as clear as any in the entire text. It would seem to imply a conditional desire on the part of the writer to prod or thrust forward into a substance called "smush," with certain objects designated as "guys or dolls." These objects would appear to have a mysterious meteorological significance.

Possibly "smush" may be a variation of the Scottish word "sneesh" (snuff). Or again, "smush" may indicate a kind of bag or sack, and the infinitive "to poke" may here express a desire to conceal the guys or dolls within a smush. Or perhaps, since the writer elsewhere refers to himself as a "guy," it may indicate a neurotic desire to be smothered in smush.

The editors describe this essay as "delightfully two-edged." But grind at it as we may, we cannot seem to give it even one edge. So, since the New Statesman and Nation has not seen fit to publish a rosetta stone, we are forced to appeal to our learned readers. We hate to miss the point of anything.

The Dictators Meet.

At the Nyon conference, a fortnight ago, Great Britain and France finally abandoned the policy of retreat which had characterized their relations with the Fascist dictatorships over a period of many months. Acting with speed and determination, the two democratic powers took positive steps to protect their threatened interests in the Mediterranean—by force, if necessary.

It was an about-face the importance of which was not lost on Berlin and Rome. The Nyon accord showed that there is a point beyond which Great Britain and France will not permit themselves to be pushed. It was also a reflection of the growing self-confidence of those nations in their new-found strength. For with each passing month of French, and particularly British, re-armament the balance of military power has shifted more and more to the side of the Anglo-French entente, and away from the Berlin-Rome axis.

Subsequent Anglo-French negotiations with Italy, over the division of the anti-piracy patrol zones in the Mediterranean, have clearly revealed that the London and Paris governments are not disposed to press their advantage to secure any cheap victory of prestige. They have no desire to humiliate Mussolini. They would much prefer to co-operate with him, and with Hitler as well, if a genuine stabilization of peace can thereby be assured. That is why real concessions were made to Italy in the post-Nyon negotiations. But this time it was Mussolini who was the suitor.

In other words, any advantages which a policy of bluff and bluster may have achieved at the time of the Ethiopian campaign, and more recently with regard to Spain, are now offset by the law of diminishing returns. Continuance of present tensions in Europe can only stiffen the British determination to go ahead with their $7,500,000,000 re-armament program and might possibly expand it. Sooner or later such a development is likely to leave Italy and even Germany outclassed. The dictators are quite shrewd enough to realize this.

Under the circumstances the reports that Mussolini is now in a more conciliatory mood with regard to Great Britain and France may easily prove true. And it goes without saying that the democracies will go as far as they can to meet any reasonable overtures half-way.

The principal obstacle to an Italo-French and Italo-British rapprochement is Italian interventionist activity in Spain. At Geneva, the other day, Foreign Minister Delbos of France indicated that any additional reinforcements of the Italian contingents helping the insurgents would compel the Paris government to open the Franco-Spanish frontier. In view of what happened at Nyon, this threat cannot be dismissed at Rome as meaningless. No wonder, then, as to the reports that Italy is prepared to pledge itself to send no additional "volunteers" to Spain if, in return, France agrees not to open the frontier.

It seems increasingly probable that the Italian and German dictators may, at their forthcoming meeting, sound the pipes of peace rather than beat the drums of war. The chances of political stabilization in Europe are increased alike by deadlock in Spain and chaos in the Far East.

It's Over, Over There!

Uncle Billy.

UNCLE BILLY MacGRAGOR was born in Glasgow, Scotland, but as a young man, well before the turn of the century, he migrated to America, where he followed the trade of bricklaying with success. Fifty years later, when I was a schoolboy in a small town on Maryland's Eastern Shore, Uncle Billy had assumed the proportions of a local character, as well known as the town's courthouse or war memorial.

Uncle Billy was old by then—his tall frame a bit warped, his deep, resonant voice a bit rasped, by the years that had passed him by and left him with a white beard and bushy white eyebrows that failed to hide the sparkle in his eye. He looked a good bit like the Uncle Sam the cartoonists drew, and when he made his slow and rheumatic progress down North street after supper he paused to speak to everyone, calling a greeting in his rich Scotch brogue. And everyone spoke to him.

Of course, there were stories galore about Uncle Billy, who had an inherent fondness for all things Scotch. About the time, for instance, when he was wont to spend jolly evenings with other young men. In order to pilot him safely home at night his wife hung a red lantern by the back door of their house, which was close by the river.

* * *

Uncle Billy sighted the lantern all right, and made for it, leaning a bit to windward but pretty sure of his footing. The next thing he knew, a watchman was fishing him out of the river. The lantern he had followed, instead of being on his back porch, was hanging on the stern of a barge out in midstream!

But the town's favorite story about Uncle Billy was not about either lanterns or canals. It concerned the night he was walking down a lonely stretch of road, just beyond the town limits. He happened to pass under a tree in which an owl was wisely perched.

Uncle Billy stopped, looked in all directions and waited.

That was too much for Uncle Billy.

"I'm Billy MacGragor, from Glasgow, Scotland," he shouted. "And who might ye be, asking questions at this hour of the night?"

Nobody ever knew whether Uncle Billy told that story on himself or whether it was made up out of the whole cloth. But it was a standing joke for years, and a whole generations of youngsters made great sport of sneaking up behind the venerable old man to shout "Who-o-o!" in innocent but owl-like tones. Uncle Billy would always turn and shake his stick with angry defiance and the boys would go a-flying.

* * *

As the years went by, the story became a local classic. It lifted Uncle Billy from the ranks of the ordinary citizenry and made him a landmark. Then came a winter, long after the story originated, when a large snow owl fell victim to a hunter's rifle, and that proud sportsman had the bird stuffed. He brought it to my father's drug store and we put it on display in the big front window with a card to explain the rarity of such an owl on the Eastern Shore.

The very first night that the bird was on display I was loafing in front of the store when I saw Uncle Billy slowly making his way down Ninth street. He came past the firehouse and the Ford garage until finally he reached the store window. There he stopped, and for a long minute stood in rapt admiration.

Finally he turned to me and pointed to the owl with the tip of his cane.

"My, my, what a wonderful bir-r-rd," he said. "If I only could have him mounted on my tombstone!"

And he went on downtown, toward the cigar store he loved to haunt.

The other day I went back home, for the first time in months, and they told me Uncle Billy was dead. The town seemed to have lost something of its personality, and I thought of the old man's jesting remark. I felt sure that if St. Peter had half as good a sense of humor as Uncle Billy, he greeted the old man at the pearly gate with a quavering "Who-o-o!"

And I could imagine the answer, proud as ever:

"Uncle Billy MacGragor, from Glasgow, Scotland. And who might ye be, asking questions?"

Useful Armies.

The crab industry in Germany is in a bad way, so the army has been called on to eat crab at least once or twice a month. Let it be hoped that a large majority of the German soldiers like crab.

Goering, however, didn't invent this high-handed practice. In 1930, soldiers in Czechoslovakia were ordered to substitute a glass of milk for their breakfast coffee. The minister of war's order was designed to assist agriculturalists, who were in dire straits at that time. Both the French army and the French navy ministers have not been above adopting the same practice. It also was in 1930 that the canning factories on the western coast of France were on half-time because of a slump in sardine eating. The minister of marine kindly arranged for sailors to eat more sardines, and the canneries went back on full shifts.

So armies are of some use, after all.

Medical Aid To Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many inquiries have come to the office of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy in the last ten days about the State Department's recent news release that presumably showed administrative and publicity costs of various committees engaged in aiding Spain to be greater than the aid itself. We shall appreciate greatly if, through the medium of your columns, we can give out some facts in our possession that will answer those interested in the work we are doing.

The receipts and disbursements of the American Friends of Spanish Democracy of Washington were not listed specifically in the State Department's release, its funds having been included in figures given for the North American Committee to Aid Spanish Democracy, of which this organization is an affiliate. Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of New York, in a statement issued on September 6 in behalf of the North American committee, the Medical Bureau to Aid Spanish Democracy, and the Confederated Spanish Societies, pointed out that the State Department figures were based on incomplete reports, admitting additional cash donations for the period May-June-July, as well as the value of commodities and clothes sent to loyalist Spain. He reported that administrative and publicity costs had amounted to only 13 per cent of receipts; 2 per cent represented cash on hand, and 85 per cent had been sent to Spain.

For the information of friends in Washington who have contributed generously to our work, we should like to report that during May, June and July, this committee raised the sum of $2,937, and of this amount $2,150 has been so far sent to Spain. Administrative costs have totaled $303, or 10.3 per cent of receipts. The sum of $484 represents cash on hand and deferred assets, which will be forwarded to Spain shortly. In other words, 90 cents out of every dollar that has been donated has gone to the loyalists and their families in the form of cash, medicine, clothes and food.

As a direct result of the August showing of "Heart of Spain" at the Washington Hotel, $600 was sent directly to Dr. Edward G. Barsky, chief of American medical units in Spain, to go toward the financing of his Hospital Caravan which he will take to Spain this fall.

We are very proud of and grateful to the Washington friends of those fighting for democracy in Spain, and believe that they will be pleased to know to what extent they have helped. BETTY WALKER.

Implied Powers.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The men who framed our Federal Constitution believed that the primary end of government was to protect property rights, because governments are always founded, organized and supported by property owners and not by the propertyless class, and secondarily to maintain the greatest amount of individual liberty commensurate with the well being of the body politic. To preserve this liberty they found it necessary to set up an elaborate system of checks and balances.

The doctrine of checks and balances is a political system by which any department of the Government may be restrained from abusing its authority through the power which has been granted to one or more of the other governmental departments. Frequently there are checks within each department. This system can only exist in mixed and free governments.

The doctrine may be expressed in a few words: The fundamental requirement of liberty is the proper separation of the legislative, the executive and judicial powers of government. This is the only effective means of keeping liberty from being destroyed by an extreme centralization of political power on one hand, and on the other from disintegrating through unrestrained license and rampant anarchism. The distribution of these powers and the limitation of their functions are carefully defined in a written Constitution, and they are to be preserved through the maintenance of equilibrium.

Today a great political storm is raging around the check developed by Chief Justice John Marshall, the celebrated doctrine of "implied powers" which gives the Supreme Court an absolute veto upon the acts of Congress, the Executive and the States. The best defense of the judicial veto is to be found in the decisions of Marshall.

The problem was, "Could an act of Congress repugnant to the Constitution become the law of the land?" If so, then the Constitution was useless and without purpose. For it said, "The Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof . . . shall be the supreme law of the land." Hence any law made contrary to the Constitution was invalid, and the authority appointed to determine such a matter was the Supreme Court.

It followed that the Supreme Court had the right to set aside any law passed by Congress and signed by the President which was brought before it; and this made the Supreme Court the most powerful tribunal in the world. The doctrine of "implied powers" may be summed up in the axiom "a grant of the end is a grant of the means." IVO DE CAPET.

North Carolina Swallow.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I submit the following excerpt from a letter received from a lifelong Democrat in North Carolina as indicating an awakening and change of sentiment in that section. He says:

"I think the sentiment against Mr. Roosevelt and all of his wild schemes and unconstitutional acts is spreading very rapidly over the country. Sooner or later the public sentiment will call a halt. One of the worst features of his whole administration is that it is an appeal to ignorance, prejudice and class, and I have never known him to advance a single constructive idea that was not in utter violation of all the principles of self-government. The fundamental trouble with our Government, as with all popular government, is that the great mass of the people are not intelligent enough to exercise the franchise wisely, and as a consequence they are ready to listen to the appeal of any demagogue." American Policy In The Far East.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Hearty congratulations upon your two editorials today, denouncing international brigandage in the Orient and warning that our own security will ultimately be menaced by aggression in the Far East. Every thoughtful Amercian must be outraged by the barbarous bombings of defenseless civilians in Shanghai and Nanking. Only Soviet Russia and the United States are in a position to check Japanese gangsterism, for Great Britain and France are preoccupied with Germany and Italy in Spain and the Mediterranean.

The least that the United States Government can do now, it seems to me, is vigorously to protest against Japanese aggression in the name of our common humanity. But this would probably prove ineffectual, for the Japanese war lords are apparently impervious to a decent respect for the opinions of mankind.

I believe that the United States should now take the initiative in forming and participating in an international alliance of the democratic countries for the preservation of world peace. The survival of democracy itself is threatened by the eczema of dictatorships that is spreading like a rash over Europe and the Orient. Only by pooling the forces of democracy in an invincible international compact can real security for democratic institutions be assured and the menace of fascism resisted.

Considering the threat to Western civilization itself of another war, perhaps even now in the making in Spain and China, the best policy for the United States is not only to keep out of it by a resolute neutrality, but also to use its influence to prevent another world war from breaking out. Fascist aggression unrestrained feeds upon itself. Manchuria led to Abyssinia; Abyssinia led to Spain; Spain has led to Shanghai. Who knows what next?
GEORGE B. GALLOWAY.
Washington, Sept. 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: All Americans do not run away from their duty. To think that the United States, who so long has boasted of her friendship for China, should be the first to haul down the flag in that unhappy land is to make one bow one's head in shame.

Mr. Elihu Washburne was American Minister to France during the Franco-Prussian War. When the Prussians were advancing on Paris all the other diplomats took to their heels. It is some comfort to think that in those days it was the American who stuck to his job and the foreigners who fled—a reversal of today's story in Nanking. The American Legation was constantly threatened, one German shell actually coming through a window and landing in the minister's bed.

I have just returned from Europe where the general opinion in vulgar parlance is that "Americans have no guts." According to the humiliating episode in Nanking it looks that way.

When I was in Germany last month I saw and talked with all sorts and conditions of Germans and heard many conflicting stories. The arrogance of one German impressed me and also made me uneasy. "This time Germany will win. With Italy and Japan we cannot be beaten." I asked what about Great Britain? "England will remain neutral—and, of course, the United States will not fight."

I think the Japanese entente is very sinister. I have been convinced from the first that Japan is but playing the overture in the East—Germany and Italy to take up the theme in the Mediterranean—break Great Britain's power and take what colonies and territory they wish. Japan wishes to inherit England's mantle in the east. She would never dare assume her present ruthless role were she not sure of strong backing in the West.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There should be an investigation to place the responsibility for hauling down the colors of the United States from the American Embassy in China and for the shameful desertion of this post when threatened with destruction by Japanese bombs.

It was a cowardly act of the first water and will deal the prestige of the United States a blow from which it will be difficult to recover.

The person responsible should never again be allowed to hold a position of trust under this Government. C. M. DODSON.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorials on the Sino-Japanese war are fine. Why not write one pointing out the attitude former President Theodore Roosevelt would have taken. He would have been firm. CITIZEN.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the way we—and the rest of the world as well—have allowed Japan to shove us around, it would be an insult to the eagle to continue to use him as our national emblem.

I suggest as an appropriate substitute the rear view of a running rabbit, with a white flag on its tail.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

On Both Sides.

TO REFER AGAIN to the farewell address, as you might call it, of Harry Colmery, the retiring commander of the American Legion, he said that no controversy can arise in this country without finding members of the American Legion arrayed on botn sides. To extend the thought, most of the other great groups in the United States have diverse interests and convictions.

The Legion, for example, contains not only members of the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. and of all races and religions, but Democrats and Republicans and even, as I was assured in a letter some time ago, at least one Communist who angrily denied that there was anything anomalous about him.

In view of the Legion's official attitude toward communism, this Communist Legionnaire would seem to be a museum piece on the order of a Nazi brother in the B'nai B'irth or a colored Klux, but no matter.

He said he was a Legionnaire and a Communist, too.

• • • •

THE C. I. O. often accused of communistic tendencies, certainly does include Communists, but it also includes Catholics—and not only members but leaders—Democrats and Republicans, Protestants in the majority, and, doubtless, also some past or present members of the Ku Klux Klan. The membership of the A. F. of L. is likewise heterogeneous, and here, too, as in the Legion, there is hardly any controversy of national interest which would not find members arrayed on both sides.

Mr. Lewis seemed to assume a little while ago that the entire vote of the C. I. O. could be delivered for or against Mr. Roosevelt at a word from him, but he is too wise to believe that, and he certainly must know that the President does not believe it, either.

The big groups overlap one another in all directions, and Americans who are conscious of racial and religious differences find themselves affiliated in other bonds all over the country, no more so in the Legion than in any other groupings.

It goes without saying that the two major political parties—if it may be assumed that the Republican is still a major party—both contain members of all faiths except the politician, in which, of course, there is a sort of unity.

And the anti-Semitic agitation which stirs now and again is hopelessly confused in its insistence that Jews are communistic or vice versa. This contention would ignore the wealthy Jewish merchants, manufacturers and capitalists who are as heartily hated and pasted by the Communists as ever was old Andy Mellon himself or the Rockefellers or Mr. Girdler. Similarly weak is the attempt to depict the Jew as the international banker, considering the squalor and poverty in which so many Jews live in the city slums.

TIME WAS NOT long ago when the vote of various foreign elements could be delivered more or less en block, but the curtailment of immigration has reduced the settlements in which they gathered and the American-born descendants, by intermarriage, have produced Americans who are not conscious of any sympathy for any other country.

As recently as 1917 the Kaiser overestimated the number of former Germans who retained some loyalty for the Fatherland and greatly deceived himself as to the split allegiance of the American-born children of these people.

Thus, now, Hitler is even more seriously in error, for immigration has been scant since the war, and there is evidence that most of those who have come over in these years have no desire to import the dictatorship with them.

Consequently, Americans object more to the impudence of the German government in claiming a mission to "protect" this country from the menace of communism than to any threat of serious domestic interference. There aren't enough Nazis among us to do serious mischief to our form of government, but a comparative few seem like a lot when they make themselves conspicuous.

The mixture, the binding together of elements in which the grain runs contrariwise, makes for toughness in the breed, to say nothing of the pleasures of being American at a time when people in other lands may be, and many of them are, executed or imprisoned for their beliefs or disbeliefs.

Ghetto Revived

Observer Finds Hitler Government's "Cold Pogrom" Against Jews Still Being Carried On And With Pristine Ruthlessness.

By Dr. Ewart Edward Turner.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

(Editor's note: This is the second of a series of four articles by Dr. Turner, formerly pastor of the American Church in Berlin. The third article will appear tomorrow.)

WHEN HITLER came to power he said, "Give me four years and then judge me by what I have done." Traveling in Germany, one finds at least two of his many promises have actually been fulfilled. First, the Versailles treaty has been destroyed and Germany has rearmed; second, Jews have been eliminatd from the public life of Germany.

"Do you expect the September Party Congress at Nuremberg to demand further legislation against the Jews?" I asked a prominent rabbi this summer in Germany. "No," he replied, "for the return of German Jews to the ghetto is already practically complete." He did not mean that Jews in Germany are again living in designated streets similar to the ghetto of the Middle Ages. He merely expressed the view shared by all German Jews that there is now no possibility for Jews to participate in the life of Germany. Even the door to economic participation is being closed. The ghetto has returned.

Let me illustrate the new ghetto from the realm of music. Jewish musicians may not play in any German opera or concert program. A special theatre has been provided special theater has been provided where they may play, but where only Jews may attend. A new ordinance has been passed forbidding these Jewish artists from using the music of German composers. They may include in their programs the music of non-German composers, such as Verdi or Tschaikowsky, but must never play anything written by Mozart, Bach, Beethoven.

Occasionally Jews in Germany will still visit motion-picture houses. One is not conspicuous there, and intermissions do not occur. Otherwise there is no opportunity for them to enjoy the larger cultural life of German opera, theater and concert.

Official Nazi publications bring "direction-giving" news item of local restrictions against Jews with the suggestion that other communities follow the example. I saw one such item in the "Volkischer Beobachter" commending a Berlin suburb for limiting Jews to certain benches in the parks marked "For Jews only." Obviously, no Jew would ever sit on benches thus marked. One resident of this suburb told me that now these benches remain empty unless some person sits down without reading the inscription.

Jews In Business Being Eased Out.

ANOTHER ITEM of the many which I saw reported a court decision. A husband, who was a party member, objected to paying a bill which his wife had contracted at a Jewish shop. The judge declared the bill to have no legal status.

By decree no loan library run by Jews may have German customers. Jewish bookshops may not carry German books. Jews are not allowed to sell German newspapers. This year for the first time I saw no Jewish newspapers on the subway newsstands; their public sale has been prohibited.

Originally, the Third Reich announced that Jews would be left free to do business. Step by step this possibility is being eliminated. There were 200 drug stores owned by Jews in Germany. A law which took effect on March 26, 1936, forces these Jewish druggists to sell or lease their stores. To date 100 have sold their drug stores, a further 60 have leased them, and the remaining 40 are in negotiations with the authorities seeking personal concessions.

In the smaller towns and in the country Jewish businesses are in a rapid process of liquidation. In some districts a person trading with a Jew is in danger of losing status with the local party officials. Julius Streicher, editor of the anti-semitical paper, Der Sturmer, is conducting a national campaign to expose all Germans found trading with Jews.

Jewish communities in some rural districts have supported themselves chiefly by handling grain and cattle. New restrictions in these occupations have so crippled the earning power of these Jewish communities that all who can have moved into the larger cities.

To study the effect of this economic situation let us examine a typical Jewish district in middle Germany. In 1932 this district had 46,923 Jews, less than 2 per cent of the population. Since 1933—32 per cent of the Jewish population has left the district. In 1932 there were 33 Jewish congregations in this district with over 100 members, now there are only 14 such congregations. In 1932, 9 congregations had over 200 members, now no such congregation exists. One extreme example in this district shows the direction in which the future development lies; in a congregation which numbered 42 in 1932, there are now only 12 members, and the youngest person in this parish is over 50 years of age.

THIS IS a dark picture. But it is not all of the picture. The German populace in these communities remains largely decent and sympathetic. One need only read Streicher's column "What the people cannot understand," to learn that the anti-semites are not satisfied with the conduct of the Germans toward Jews. In this column from Streicher's Sturmer we read hundreds of such examples as: "The German merchant Felix Nuerburg, who lives at Linz, Rhein-Anlagen 1, was operated on by the Jewish surgeon, Dr. Wolf. A large part of the population of Linz remains lukewarm to the Jewish question." In every column one or two preachers are castigated for "agitation" against the Sturmer; Frankfurt is criticized for still having a Mendelsohn street; hotels receiving Jews are listed for boycott; Germans attending Jewish weddings or funerals are pilloried.

Evidences of anti-semitism are increasingly on public display. All over Germany one sees the Sturmer spread out in display cases; each display case is painted bright red and bears in white letters the words, "The Jews are our misfortune."

Surrounded as German Jews are by increasing reminders that they are not desired in the land of their birth, they have drawn the consequences. The older ones have reconciled themselves to spending their remaining days in the ghetto. But their youth must not be sentenced to such a fate. Hence, all German Jewry, assisted by world Jewry, is engaged in the colossal task of removing all Jewish youth from Germany.

During 1936 a total of 24,000 Jews left Germany, 85 per cent of whom were under 45 years of age. Palestine absorbed 9,000 of these emigrants, 10,000 found exile across the seas, 1,500 returned to their native lands, and 3,500 found refuge in other European countries. Jewish relief organizations have a four-year plan which hopes to care for the departure of 20,000 German Jews annually, one-half of whom will be sent to Palestine.

During the last 12 months German Jews have raised 12,500,000 marks for emergency relief purposes. With liberal outside help this has enabled them to give vocational training chiefly in agriculture and skilled labor to their youth; to retrain youth from professional occupations, to agriculture and skilled labor; to build schools for the youth unable to leave Germany at once; to provide relief and pensions for dependent Jewish families.

Already 100,000 Jews have left Germany. Of the 400,000 Jews still in Germany 55 per cent are over 45 years of age.

Uneasy Allies

By Barnet Nover

Reunion In Munich.

WHATEVER ELSE may be said about it, the meeting of Benito Mussolini and Adolf Hitler is in the great European tradition. For many decades it has been customary for kings and statesmen of Old World nations to make spectacular visits to the capitals of friendly lands and by their presence there emphasize diplomatic realities or anticipate them.

It was thus in the days of Kaiser William II, of King Edward VII, of Franz Joseph and Czar Nicholas and their contemporaries. The peregrinations of these royal figures practically always had a political purpose behind them. Not infrequently they signalized important turns in the diplomatic wheel.

There are not so many monarchs left in Europe now and those that remain on their thrones are not so important in the European scheme of things as were their predecessors. But royal visits continue to take place. In fact they have been more numerous since the World War than ever before, even though the visitors are usually not kings, but dictators, regents and premiers.

• • • •

AT A TIME WHEN enormously improved means of communication make it possible for statesmen to ignore distance in talking directly to each other without leaving their capitals, the desire for face-to-face meetings has waxed instead of waned. Europe's statesmen are nowadays constantly on the go.

It is a curious situation indeed. It shows that to modern government there is something unsatisfying in the ordinary means of diplomatic intercourse; that statesmen feel the usual routine must from time to time be supplemented by the personal meetings of the policy-makers. Precisely what is behind this feeling is not quite clear. But one factor responsible for it is certainly the absence of any diplomatic certainties.

Now that was not the case in the past. The published archives of the various foreign ministries reveal that an element of suspicion was always to be found in the dealings of even the best of allies.

Bismarck, for instance, never failed to keep his eye on Austria. He cherished that nation as a partner, but he was always on the alert to prevent the Austro-German partnership from being used for purely Austrian ends. Austria and Germany together had their suspicions of Italy which became an ally of Berlin and Vienna early in the 80's. France was never wholly sure of Russia. Relations between Great Britain and the Czarist government even after the entente of 1907 were none too good. And so on.

• • • •

AND YET the fact was that alliances made in the pre-war period were rarely broken. They weathered all kinds of storms and with the exception of the Italian alliance with Germany and Austria-Hungary they stood up under the test.

Possibly Europe and the world would have been better off if that had not been the case. But at any rate there is no denying that the stability of pre-war alliance contrasts sharply with the fluidity of present-day diplomatic groupings.

Some of them have been in existence for quite a number of years. But there is hardly one concerning which one or another of the partners is perfectly certain will be carried out when the test comes.

• • • •

ONE NEED NOT, in this respect, cite merely such obviously fluid arrangements as that made by Poland and Germany in 1934. That did not constitute an alliance or even an entente. It was merely a modus-vivendi for the purpose of suspending an evil situation dangerous to both sides. With seven years still to go the arrangement is already showing a good deal of wear and tear.

But even such apparently durable arrangements as that recently concluded by Great Britain and France regarding the defense of France's Rhine frontier against German attack have an element of uncertainty about them.

The chances are very real that if France is attacked directly by Germany Great Britain will come to the support of the French. But if Germany attacks France indirectly through, say, Czechoslovakia, will Great Britain act? To that question there is no answer. And because no answer is possible the utility to France of the British alliance, great as it is, is not sufficient to end French fears. For France cannot help but think in continental terms.

That is why France has refused to abandon its alliances with Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Rumania and Poland and why it holds on to its alliance with Russia even while refusing to implement the latter alliance by a military pact. In each case there is an element of dubiety which must be taken into account. For each of these allies, even including Czechoslovakia, there is an alternative course which can be taken if absolutely necessary. This the statesmen of those countries know—and French statesmen know, too.

WHAT IS TRUE of France is true also of the other powers. Russia has a long-standing alliance with Turkey as well as more recent ones with France and Czechoslovakia. But while prepared to act as though these alliances are permanent it must also consider the possibility that they will not prove durable. European diplomacy today is built on quicksand. It was not so long ago when Germany and Russia were the best of friends. Look at them now!

In the case of Germany and Italy the highly vaunted Berlin-Rome axis is now just about a year old. For the moment it seems impregnable. Indeed the present meeting of dictators is intended to emphasize just that. But the memory of what happened in 1914, when Italy deserted the triple alliance is strong in Germany and, on the other hand, the recollection of the bloody Viennese sequel to the 1934 meeting of Mussolini and Hitler at Venice are no doubt still fresh in the minds of the Duce.

In Europe today the friends of the moment are friends of the moment and just that. That makes for frenzied diplomacy. And, it is possible to argue, it also makes for relative peace. Since no nation is strong enough to embark on a major war alone and since no nation can be quite sure of its present allies the sword is kept in the scabbard and the bombing planes in their hangars.

For the moment the only safe wars are the little wars such as that Italy waged in Ethiopia and Italy and Germany have been waging in Spain.

City of London

By William Lyon Phelps

Encyclopaedia.

London is not the most beautiful city in the world; it is not so beautiful as Paris. But I do not know of any large town so interesting. It is inexhaustible. I do not wonder that the novelists and dramatists have spent a considerable part of their lives walking its streets. It is a world in itself, and the river flowing through it adds enormously to its charm. Whenever I am in London I get a room facing on the river, where I can see seven bridges, St. Paul's Cathedral on the east, the House of Parliament, Big Ben, and Westminster Abbey on the west.

• • • •

Not only is London enormously interesting from a contemporary, daily-newspaper point of view, but what city is richer in historical associations? Others, like Athens, contributed to civilization in earlier centuries, but none of them kept up a steady contribution for so long a time.

A book, not large in size, but containing 772 well-printed pages, appears this very month; it has the interesting and accurate title "An Encyclopaedia of London," is well supplied with illustrations and maps. Authorities differ as to the origin of the name London; no one knows for certain. I thought I could find it in the latest work, "The Oxford Dictionary of English Place-Names," but it is clear that even that book cannot prove the etymology. The Romans called it Londinium.

Looks Into a Crabber's Life Along the Rappahannock.

WHEN YOU get down as far as Morattico, Va., you're really in the country. It's fine, friendly country, with an accent on kerosene lamps, old-fashioned farmhouses, quiet voices and the best fish dinners you'll ever eat. There's a cool breeze off the Rappahannock and, about 8 o'clock at night, you're ready to turn in.

TOM McCARTHY.

I'd never think of describing the region in the same way that the man from Baltimore did, but Mr. C. T. Slaughter, who operates the only crabbing depot on the river, told it to me, so I guess it's all right to pass it along.

The man from Baltimore was city-born and city-bred, and life among the quiet farmers and fishermen at Morattico, without the benefit of electric lights and dial telephones, wasn't his idea of a good time.

"Darndest country I ever saw!" he told Mr. Slaughter. "When they want to take a bath, they put one foot in the basin and wash one side. Then they put the other foot in the basin and wash the other side. All the time the phone keeps ringing and they only answer it once an hour." Mr. Slaughter said that life along the Rappahannock was just too much for the man from Baltimore.

• • • •

FRANKLY, I HAD something in common with the man from Baltimore. I had a problem. I asked Mr. Slaughter when the people around Morattico slept. 'Most everyone down there has some interest in the crabbing business and, as far as I could see, that meant that they didn't get any sleep.

Mr. Slaughter and Jack Curlett had met us at the dock on the river. They were overseeing the unloading of barrels of freshly caught Rappahannock crabs. That was along about early afternoon. I returned, shortly after dark, to see them steam the crabs. Both gentlemen were at work superintending that. I came back, at 3 in the morning, to see the 70 or more women crab-pickers breaking the shells and digging out the two choice humps of crab meat which, in a few hours more, would be headed for the best restaurants in the country. Both gentlemen were on the job superintending that.

When I came back later in the morning, after the boats had gone out to the crabbing grounds, they were still on the job. I couldn't quite figure out how they stood it. So I asked them about it.

"When do we sleep?" Mr. Slaughter said. "Why, we sleep in the oyster season!"

• • • •

Along the Rappahannock, the oyster season starts in October and carries through till April. And, while Mr. Slaughter was grinning pretty hard when he said that he caught up on his sleep then, I'm not sure there wasn't an element of truth in it.

• • • •

TALKING WITH the fishermen—or "crabbers"—I learned that the crabbing industry is not only a 24-hour-a-day business, but also one of the most fascinating in the world.

Capt. Hemmel . . . and every crabber is a captain . . . didn't quite satisfy himself with his explanation of its fascination, but he satisfied me.

"I don't know just what there is about it," he said, "but it's the greatest game in the world. You see, we're our own boss. Each of us has a little boat, most of them like that little power boat over there. We get paid for what we catch, and there's always a little gamble to it. Some have made as high as $20 in a single day.

"Darn it!" he said, "I don't know as I'm getting it across to you just why I like this business so much. Maybe I better try another angle." Capt. Hammel puffed at a meditative cigarette for a moment.

"Well, you see," he said, "we go out early in the morning. There's a cool breeze on the river. The sun comes up and its quiet out there . . . except, maybe, for the scream of a gull.

"Darn it!" he said again, "I don't think I've got it across to you yet. Do you get what I'm driving at?"

I told him that I thought I did.

• • • •

I WENT OUT with Capt. Smith to his crabbing grounds, but he told me I wouldn't be able to get the best idea of how it's done, because it was a poor day for crabbing. The water was quite rough and, as we bounced up and down in his little power boat, he told me that, in rough water the crabs are knocked off the bait.

A few miles up the river he throttled the motor down and threw a peach basket out the back of the boat, so that it dragged through the water, just behind the rudder. He explained that the peach basket had nothing to do with catching the crabs, it was simply used to slow the boat.

With the long pole, to which his net was attached, he fished down into the water, as we passed a little wooden buoy. He brought a heavy line out of the water and passed it over a wooden roller attached to an arm which protruded from the side of the boat. Then he proceeded to show me how they catch crabs.

He guided the boat slowly along his half a mile of line. The line was baited with tripe . . . but no hooks were used. The bait was knotted into the line and crabs simply grabbed it and hung on. As the boat passed along the line, which is laid on the river bottom, the line, bait and, occasionally, a crab were brought out of the water, as the line wound around the wooden roller on the arm.

Just before the crab would reach the roller, Capt. Smith would reach out with his net and catch the crab as it fell. Hardshells went into one barrel and softshells were put in another.

From early morning until the sun warms the water and the crabs stop biting, the "crabbers" patrol their lines. Sometimes the lines are a mile long. They return to the dock at Slaughter's with their catch and those farther down the river turn in their catch to Capt. Fred, who operates the "buy-boat."

• • • •

THIS IS just the beginning of work at the crabbing depot. Soft-shelled crabs are packed alive for shipment and the hard-shelled crabs are prepared for steaming. Lowered into huge, iron-ribbed kettles, they are placed in a giant cooker and steamed under pressure.

This cooking sterilizes the crabs and, after cooling for six hours, the "crab pickers" extract the meat. The latter process may sound prosaic, but there's a thrill in watching it. Work is started about 2 in the morning and carried forward with an easy laughter by the 70 colored women in the long white room.

Under the glaring brightness of the overhead light, which glances from their white aprons and uniforms, they bend to their task, breaking the monotony of their chore with song and laughter.

I drove down at 3 in the morning to watch them work. As we neared the river light flooded from the windows of the neat gray building and traced itself on the water. From within came the sound of an unfamiliar spiritual. It wasn't the melancholy kind. If anything, it was jaunty.

The "crab pickers" were at work . . . and singing.

The Federal Diary

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

An Honest Book.

The Department of Agriculture's 1938 Yearbook will deal with soils; the 1939 book with animal and human nutrition, says an announcement. But that is not the interesting thing; what stands out is the refreshing and premeditated honesty which will be the basis of the works. In assigning the writers, the committee says:

"It is not intended to be in any sense a textbook, nor, on the other hand, a piece of popular journalism. It should reflect the best and the freshest thought in its field, not hesitating to attack outdated concepts and techniques, to show up faults and gaps in knowledge, and to discuss new viewpoints and trends. Where there are conflicting viewpoints, let each be defended by able proponents, but do not stick to a viewpoint merely because it is safe and accepted."

H. G. Knight, chief, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, is chairman of the '38 committee, and O. E. Reed, chief, Bureau of Dairy Industry, is chairman of the '39 committee—and perhaps to them should go the congratulations of those who love intellectual honesty—even in government.

Mrs. Henrietta C. Wright, copartner with Mrs. Eva O. Steimer, has returned to Utica, N. Y., where her husband, a former Treasury employe, has accepted a position. Mrs. Wright is well known among New Yorkers here because of her efforts with the New York Democratic unit, a group which disseminates information on election laws, registration dates and notarizes absentee ballots. Mrs. Steimer will continue the work of the unit, whose office is in room 210 Colorado Building. As the local registration dates for New York City are from October 4 to 9, inclusive, special trains will leave Washington on October 8 and 9 for those wishing to register.

The tribulations of workers in Uncle Sam's Internal Revenue headquarters — what with gilt-edged citizens dodging here and loopholing there—were enhanced recently by a droll incident, as complained of in an agent's report to the Special Adjustment Division:

"He had developed a habit of making notations of financial transactions on the wall of his office. One time, when he was out of town, his landlord had the walls of the office painted and when the taxpayer returned his records were gone." Confusion confounded.

Jimmie Cagney Plays 'Hoofer' In Filmusical

Jimmie Cagney, going gaily song-and-dance, still has that Cagney punch. The new dancing Cagney combines a top-flight Broadway stepper with the shindy-starting Cagney we've always known. The result is sprightly diversion with knock-out moments.

The Cagney role of a star Manhattan orchestra leader and "hoofer," who is drafted by Hollywood, lends itself to a gorgeous ribbing of the way in which stars are born. Some segments of the gilded hide of Hollywood are ripped off, but any passing disillusionment is balanced off by laughs.

When Terry Rooney (Cagney) faces his movie employer, he finds out that he is impossible, simply impossible. The make-up man says that his hairline doesn't belong with his face, the diction expert practically faints at the sound of Terry's Broadwayese, the tailor tells him that he "doesn't dress like a gentleman." Jimmy submits to standing around for days and letting the tailor stick pins in him, but he is stern about being tickled. He struggles day and night to attain "pear-shaped vowels" demanded by the diction mogul. He submits glumly to the make-up expert, but absolutely balks at being given a Robert Taylor widow's peak.

Told He's a Dud.

Comes the shooting and the "rushes" decide his employer that Jimmy is the find of the years. But does he congratulate Jimmy? Na-a-ah! The nasty man issues instructions that Jimmy is to be told that he putrifies the celluloid and generally treated meaner than mean—this the preliminary to tying him up on a low salary contract. Low as the bottom of the sea, Jimmy elopes with his girl friend and goes for a honeymoon on a tramp steamer. By the time he gets back, his picture is a howling success. His new contract necessarily puts him "in the money." But a publicity love-affair with a Hollywood siren gets his marriage all retangled. He has to break away from that ol' davil celluloid and the wind-up sees him happy again as a song-and-dance man.

As you may judge, the story is rather a pippin.

Cagney's performance is squarely up to standard. And he's quite an acrobatic dancer. As entertainment the show is all right, but, also if and um-m and er-r-r, it so happens that it's hardly worth the Cagney talent. What he needs is another powerful and hard-hitting show, one as good as his first gangster movie, or "The St. Louis Kid."

Barrie Goes Garbo.

While Cagney dominates the picture, he is best assisted by William Frawley as a publicity agent. Bill plays with his usual light, tough touch and no one, not even Mr. Cagney, steals any scenes from him. Evelyn Daw is sweetly pretty as the Cagney true-love, and Mona Barrie does a strongly accented portrayal as the would-be love. We wish that Miss Barrie hadn't so evidently had Garbo in mind. The character actors who play the makeup, diction and tailoring experts steal most of the rest of the laurels.

Swing fans will go off the deep end for Bob Crosby and his orchestra. He has just the kind of puzzling, sharp rhythms that seem to set them "nuts." And added to this, he is carrying a flock of up-and-up entertainers, including a pair of young shag-dancers whose style is the most novel and delightful seen in a dozen pink moons. Other Crosby stars are Ray Baudue, Bob Haggart and Eddie Miller, who do things with the drums, bass and their feet that will do things to you. Hal Sherman, quaintest of steppers and with even quainter jokes, and slack-wire artists Marie and the Case brothers complete a shining vaudeville lineup.

RKO-Keith's

Soaring into its third week, with mounting rather than diminishing attendance, "One Hundred Men and a Girl" takes rank with the most popular of the long-run musical screen plays that have made records at RKO-Keith's.

This is public recognition that is richly deserved. Deanna Durbin, the 14-year-old singer - actress - comedienne; Leopold Stokowski, world-famous conductor, and Adolphe Menjou, one of the most reliable of the cinema's character actors, are enough in themselves to make notable this highly entertaining story of a small girl's fight against adversity.

The tale of the organization of a symphony orchestra of 100 indigent musicians, which Stokowski finally is induced to direct, however, has much more to commend it. It has the fluttery comedy of Alice Brady, as an impulsive society matron of great wealth; Eugene Pallette, as her husband, the unwitting sponsor; Jed Prouty, the inveterate practical joker, and Frank Jenks, as a taxi driver with a musical soul. It has magnificent music by Stokowski's own symphony, under his direction, and a series of beautifully sung songs and arias by the youthful star.

Direction and photography are on a parity with the high quality of the rest of the film's major assets. It is something not to be missed for those who seek diversion of unusual and superlative merit.

As the run continues, so do the abbreviated camera subjects that constitute the supplementary features of the bill. All are worth seeing, with a new issue of the Pathe News supplanting the old one this week-end. N. B. B.

'Souls at Sea' Costars Cooper and Raft at Earle; Stage Play Finely Filmed in 'Dead End' at Palace

"SOULS AT SEA." Paramount picturization of a story by Ted Lesser, adapted to the screen by Grover Jones and Dale Van Every, costarring Gary Cooper and George Raft, with Frances Dee, Olympe Bradna, Henry Wilcoxon, Harry Carey, Robert Cummings, Porter Hall, George Zucco, Virginia Weidler, Joseph Schildkraut, Gilbert Emery, Lucien Littlefield, Tully Marshall, Monte Blue and Stanley Fields. Directed by Henry Hathaway. Previewed Wednesday, September 22. At the Earle Theater.

Founded on an actual maritime trial that was held in open court almost a century ago, "Souls at Sea" offers a drama of old slave-running days that has been brought to the screen with more than ordinary skill and thoroughness. It is, of course, in essence violent melodrama, but melodrama leavened with a strong element of romance and a picturesqueness of costume and setting that frequently distract attention from the turgid developments that lie at the base of the plot.

BELL.

These, however, are inevitable as the film progresses. From the conviction of a seaman for "mass murder on the high seas," in the opening scenes, the action reverts to the events that actually took place, as revealed by a new and important witness with belated testimony, sponsored by the British crown. It is in this manner that the real character of the accused is brought to light. "Nuggin" Taylor, it seems, was a bit of a dreamer and altruist, with a strong vein of poetry running through his nature and an indomitable courage fortifying his acts. Everything that he had done was to the end of killing off the hideous brutalities of the outlawed traffic in human lives. To be of service to the British secret service, it was necessary that he pose as a slave trader, mired deep in the ramifications of running contraband cargo from the African coast to America.

Turns Up a Scoundrel.

In the course of this clandestine pursuit of justice and enforcement of the law, he happened upon a bit of knavery in the English admiralty. The chief offender was a handsome young officer with an even handsomer younger sister. "Nuggin's" only offense was that in a crisis he saved those in his lifeboat worth saving and caused the renegades to perish.

Such is the framework of the story. In its screen exposition it alternates thrills and romance and reaches a climax that is tremendously exciting. The sinking of the clipper ship, on which all of the important figures in the tale are traveling to the United States for a variety of conflicting motives, is one of the masterpieces of modern filmcraft. It is piled high with suspense, wild action, physical conflict and tragedy. It would be worth seeing if all the remainder of the picture were poor—which it is not.

In the role of Taylor, Gary Cooper has a part that gives his talents wide range. He is a lover as diffident as he is honest; an adventurer as brave as he is daring and a friend as amusingly helpful as he is heedlessly loyal. The part is played with a deliberate attention to its every vagrant facet that adds greatly to its effectiveness.

Raft Proves Mettle.

A characterization of companion worth is contributed by George Raft, costarred with Cooper, in the role of Powdah, a bona fide slaver who never has been anything else, but who finds love and regeneration in a former ladies maid, with whom he perishes aboard ship in one of the most pathetic scenes in the play. His role throughout is both humorous and sympathetic and one that stamps Raft as an actor deserving of escape from the pomaded parts he previously has played.

Feminine interest centers in Frances Dee, cast opposite Gary Cooper, and Olympe Bradna, one of the most promising of the newer screen actresses, who brings the new vision into Powdah's life. Henry Wilcoxon is the competent villain of the piece and a long list of other lesser characters are portrayed admirably by a carefully selected cast, led by Gilbert Emery, little Virginia Weidler, Robert Cummings, Lucien Littlefield, George Zucco, Joseph Schildkraut and Tully Marshall. The direction and photography are of a superlative order.

Ina Ray Gyrates.

On the stage at the Earle this week, the brief interlude of living entertainment is supplied by Ina Ray Hutton and Her Melodears, the feminine orchestra already so well known to the Capital. Miss Hutton still lives up to the vivacious promise of her taffy-blonde beauty and leads with her chin and her knees almost as much as she does with her swishing baton. Her dances remain the last word in tap and "swing" expression of prevalent moods in popular rhythms.

In addition to instrumental specialties introduced during the band numbers—notably in a "swing" arrangement of "Trees"—a young woman whose name I understood to be Elaine Merritt sings effectively at the microphone and the Winstead Trio, two male guitarists and a girl, to all intents and purposes "stop the show," a long-standing habit of theirs. The act is colorfully staged and Miss Hutton's gowns—what there is of them—probably will ravish feminine eyes.

A new issue of the Paramount News and Freddie Clark's orchestral trimmings further augment a feature that marks a high achievement in motion picture production.

Theater Heads Speak.

Joins the Long-Run Film Stars

By her surprising ability as a comedienne and actress, as well as by the extraordinary quality of her voice, the juvenile Miss Deanna Durbin, whose latest portrait study is reproduced herewith, has earned a third week at RKO-Keith's Theater in Universal's production of "One Hundred Men and a Girl." Her co-stellar associates are Leopold Stokowski, world-famous conductor, and Adolphe Menjou.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Sept. 24.—Idol Chatter: With Sonja Henie in Norway, Hollywood's predatory beauties have declared open season on Tyrone Power. Day by day, in every way, it is getting harder to arrange studio tours for sightseers. No love lost: Bette Davis and Edward G. Robinson. Ginger Roger's photographic diary—recorded in 16 milimeter movies—costs her about $1,000 a year. Among those things that amaze me: The luncheon capacity of 98-pound Louise Rainer.

SONJA HENIE.

Helen Wills Moody has been flirting with a screen career for years—now that she has a divorce to her credit, maybe Hollywood will give her a chance. Eleanor Powell's mother tells everyone that her greatest ambition is to be a grandmother. Filmville's bitterest rivals: Jeannette MacDonald and Grace Moore. Frank Morgan gave his first public performance as a boy soprano soloist in a church choir. Look alikes: Ronald Colman and Paul Lukes—in profile.

Wonder why newspapers always refer to the unemployed husbands of movie queens as "brokers?" John Miljan has never been a popular star on the screen, but he is "tops" in the estimation of the workmen on the sets. Priscilla Moran, Paramount's newest discovery, used to be Jackie Coogan's screen sweetheart, when she was about 5 years old. Study in contrasts: Wallace Beery, screen villain, chucking slaves overboard to drown—and Wallace Beery, private citizen, making color photographs of California wild flowers. Bet many an extra girl would like to earn the money Twentieth Century is paying for the cow that works in "Old Chicago."

Whenever I hear about one of the salary strikes now current in Hollywood, I am reminded of Garbo—and the most successful wage war ever fought by a player. She made her first American picture, "The Torrent," for $150 a week—demanded more when the critics praised her, and was curtly refused. Garbo said nothing, started her second picture without further protest, and then, midway through its production, disappeared. Days went by and the producers, facing a loss of untold thousands, were desperate when the vanishing Swede strode into the front office, accompanied by a lawyer and a couple of burlies who staggered under their load of press clippings. "Three thousand, five hundred a week—or I go home," Garbo announced calmly as the clippings were piled on the mogul's desk. She got it! Today's salary strikers are pikers compared with a woman who multiplied her paycheck 23 times in a single week.

David B. Wilentz, attorney general of New Jersey, visited Columbia the other day and watched Irene Dunne and Cary Grant play a scene. The set represented a courtroom—the case on trial was a suit for divorce. Takes and retakes went on for 30 minutes, 45 minutes, an hour—and Wilentz fidgeted like a man sitting on an ant hill. When the scene was finally "in the can," Irene asked the distinguished visitor what he thought of it. "Why," said he, "it was good, but I would have interrupted if I had not been warned about talking. Everyone kept calling you the plaintiff. That's not correct—you should have been called the 'complainant.'" Irene told the director, the scene was reshot at a cost of about $500—and Mr. Wilentz was urged to forget the "Quiet, Please" signs.

Wandering around the labyrinth of stages M-G-M this morning, I stopped to watch a troupe of technicians "ageing" a set. Two men with spray guns stained the walls with gray-brown paint. Old Dame Nature, herself, would have been proud to claim their handiwork. In their wake worked one of Hollywood's unsung heroes—a "cobweb spinner." With a "gun" that ejected an almost invisible threat of rubbery fluid, he covered the walls with filmy webs. The carpenters had just left when I arrived: when I left, an hour later, that brand new set looked hundreds of years old. Stars are not the only "artists" in Hollywood.

Metropolitan

"THEY WON'T FORGET." Warner Brothers picturization of Ward Green's book, "Death in the Deep South," adapted to the screen by Aben Kandel and Robert Rossen, featuring Claude Rains, Edward Norris, Gloria Dickson, and Otto Kruger. Directed by Mervyn Leroy. Reviewed Friday evening by Dorothea Lewis.

This is a brave picture and a bitter one. Mervyn LeRoy has stripped its story of blind, cruel prejudice to the very bones. It is worth seeing if only for its terseness, clarity and straightforwardness as it moves inevitably to the stark, useless tragedy of its conclusion.

Robert Perry Hale is a young Northerner teaching in a Southern town. He does not fit and knows it, for he cannot understand nor sympathize with Southern viewpoints and sentiments. When a young girl, one of his students, is murdered in the school building and a few slight circumstantial clews connect him with the crime, he is seized upon with glee by an ambitious and unscrupulous district attorney as the hapless victim upon whose sacrificial body can be built a magnificent tissue of lies, publicity and political power.

There are touches of the Scottsboro trial and all the other sectional court battles—the famous lawyer from New York, the inflamed press not believing a word it is printing but "selling the prejudice angle," and the unconscious slips made by the "foreign" defendant.

All of it is brutal and too much of it is true. It stirs the same emotions that "Fury" and "I'm a Fugitive" touch off—pity, indignation, disgust, helplessness and wonder if, when and how it can be changed.

The question of the guilty party is unimportant, just as it is, in the picture, to the politicians. One never knows who is guilty, does not even know absolutely that Hale is not, although perjury, sideglances, little stressed details all go to indicate his innocence.

Direction and story adaptation at first seems more outstanding than the play's acting, but perhaps acting deserves the highest praise because it is so natural and unstudied—most of the time—that it does not get under way of the cruel story it tells. Save for Claude Rains and Otto Kruger, playing the opposing attorneys, the cast is largely bignameless, which heightens the sense of reality. Rains is at times a bit flamboyant, but, on the whole, gives a crafty, clever portrait of a common shyster risen to places far above him. Young Edward Norris and Gloria Dickson are the unhappy Hales and are excellent. The Governor and his wife are sympathetically and appealingly played.

The reporter of Allan Josilyn is easy and ingratiating though utterly conscienceless. The Negro janitor is excellent, but young Elisha Cook, jr., seems very bad as the murdered girl's sweetheart.

The picture is just a little long and the Southern accents are nothing if not assorted. It is not entertainment, but it is vivid and arresting and excellently well done. The shot we'll not forget soon is that grotesque mail sack hanging from its gallows by the railroad track—a masterly touch.

Subsidiaries include a Popeye cartoon, the newsreel, a short showing how Duke Ellington makes a recording, and a pictorial of Nova Scotia.

Gershwin Tunes.

Original Kids Add Pepper to Water-Front Drama, With Sylvia Sidney.

"DEAD END." Samuel Goldwyn picturization for United Artists release of the stage play by Sidney Kingsley, adapted to the screen by Lillian Hellman, costarring Sylvia Sidney and Joel McCrea with Humphrey Bogart, Wendy Barrie, Claire Trevor, Allen Jenkins, Marjorie Main, Minor Watson, Ward Bond, Elisabeth Risdon, George Humbert, Marcelle Corday and the original wharfrats, Billy Halop, Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan, Leo B. Gorcey, Gabriel Dell and Bernard Punsly. Directed by William Wyler. Previewed Tuesday, September 21. At the Palace Theater.

Barring the introduction of an occasional expansion of scene and a few furtive glimpses into the squalor of tenement dwellings on New York's East Side, the Samuel Goldwyn film version of "Dead End," Sidney Kingsley's absorbing play of a big city's backwash that laps against the swagger apartment of the ultra-rich, adheres with remarkable fidelity to the spirit and the scene of the original work. A few minor alterations have been made, to be sure, but they are relatively unimportant.

For instance, in the stage drama, Dave, the slum youngster who took the straight road and made an architect of himself, was a cripple and therefore a slightly more valiant figure in his defiance of gangdom than Joel McCrea's physically sound embodiment of the same character. Again, "Baby Face" Martin, in the original, was mowed down by G-men bullets instead of Dave's courageous gunfire across the rooftops. But these are only inconsequential concessions to the cinema's demand for grim heroics and wide scope of action.

The vital consideration is that none of the play's powerful attacks upon the problem of juvenile delinquency, or the fulfillment of youthful dreams for the underprivileged, has been lost in the transcription to celluloid. In the large view, "Dead End" remains a gripping study of life in a single setting—a setting that embraces a complete community of humanity's dregs and society's upper stratum. It is a violent and relentless study of social clashes and economic injustices that is as effectively done before the cameras as it was behind the footlights.

Costars Do Best Work.

Nothing of the drama's strength has been sacrificed in the recasting of the pivotal roles with players habituated to the studios. Sylvia Sidney and Joel McCrea, as the tenement symbols of seemingly hopeless ambition, are authentic, forceful and infinitely appealing. It is Miss Sidney's finest opportunity in months and one of McCrea's best assignments.

This integrity is carried throughout the casting of the play. Humphrey Bogart, with his close-clipped speech and gangster viewpoint, is a perfect personification of the "Baby Face" Martin, who returns to his earlier haunts to see his mother and his girl with a high price on his head for the murder of eight people and robberies by the score. Allen Jenkins is efficient as his bulldozed henchman and Claire Trevor, a pathetic figure as Francey, the coveted girl, who has become a lady of the pavements and the victim of a deadly affliction. At the opposite end of the social scale are Wendy Barrie, with whom Dave believes himself to be in love, until Drina's superior character reveals itself. All play with sharply defined clarity and conviction.

The play's enlivening realism, however, springs primarily from the amazingly natural performances of the ragged urchins who make the docks a breeding place of petty crime—Billy Halop, Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan, Leo B. Gorcey, Gabriel Dell and Bernard Punsly. These lads, borrowed from Norman Geddes' New York stage production, make Tommy, "Dippy," "Angel," "Spit," "T. B." and Milty as precious a gang of young cutthroats as one would care to run up an alley to evade. They make it very tough, indeed, for Charles Peck, as Philip, the son of all the wealth that gazes down at them in their rags and hovels.

Support and Subsidiaries.

There are many others who contribute in varying degrees to the total record of excellence that the picture registers—Minor Watson, Marjorie Main, as the mother who will have none of her murderous son, protected from the law by plastic surgery; Ward Bond, as the harassed apartment doorman; James Burke, as Mulligan, the cop; Elisabeth Risdon, in a mere "bit," and Marcelle Corday, governess to the rich kid, to mention only a few.

The auxiliary attractions at the Palace this week are on a par with the best of the market's short-reels. Pete Smith has fun with the Green Bay Packers, professional football champs, in "Pigskin Champions;" tuneful diversion is sound in the musical "Carnival in Paris," and the pictured "Events of the Day" further supplements a feature that was worth the $165,000 its screen production rights cost.

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, Sept. 24.

PEGGY JOYCE, who returned from Europe two weeks ago, will sail back to England next month. At the Stork Club she confided to me that she is engaged to marry a 35-year-old Britisher, former member of Parliament, who now conducts a column for a London newspaper . . . "He fell in love with me when I came back to England, after my accident in Switzerland," she stated . . . "How do you know it was love?" she was asked . . . "Because," Peggy explained, "at that time—I looked like hell!"

NORMAN ALLEY, war-time newsreel cameraman, is flying across the Pacific to film the activities in China for Universal Newsreel. A representative of his wife is trying to arrange to have Alley's employers secure adequate insurance for his family . . . Two weeks after the Cotton Club premiere—which was postponed because of the American Legion's wrecking of traffic there—Bill Robinson will join the revue . . . Newbold Morris, Park-avenue-born Republican candidate for council president, is considering resigning from the swank Racquet and Tennis Club and has taken to reading the New Masses!

AT SOCIETY'S SCAVENGER-HUNT parties here, special prizes are offered for the capture of American Legion hats from the most distant point . . . With three anti-war films being exhibited on Broadway, the Squire Theater, where Hemingway's "Spanish Earth" now is being shown, will offer free admission to Legionnaires . . . At 3 a. m. a group of Legionnaires in front of Leon & Eddie's cornered a civilian passer-by and tried to get him to join them. They didn't recognize—Secretary of War Woodring! . . . And Norma Talmadge is so scared of the conventioners she hasn't budged from her hotel room in three days!

THE NEWSPAPERS all have commented upon the spontaneity of the Legionnaires' actions. It's all natural, they insist, and unrehearsed . . . And yet the entire front page of a morning tab here was devoted to a picture showing a Legionnaire spontaneously riding a horse into the lobby of the McAlpin Hotel—to register both himself and his steed . . . In the left-hand corner of that photo was the grinning face of Will Yolen—the hotel's press agent.

"CHARLIE CHAN ON BROADWAY" is the best of the Chan series. The story is by Art Arthur, Hollywood's most promising scenarist, who was the Broadway columnist for the Brooklyn Daily Eagle . . . Edwin D. Goodell, who has just quit his relief job, is forming a religious colony to set himself up as a Caucasian opposition to Father Divine . . . Belle Baker, who was married to Elias Sugarman at the National Democratic Club, didn't hire a band for the occasion. The music was furnished by the American Legion bands marching continuously in the street outside.

FOR THE FIRST TIME in many years, Bert Lahr, now in Hollywood, finds himself in the same town with Joe E. Brown, the comic, who has aped Lahr's original routines. "I'm not saying Brown is unoriginal," Lahr confided, "but the only thing he ever started was a banana!" . . . Gene Fowler, whose "Salute to Yesterday" should be a best-seller, was being continually interrupted by Joe Frisco, seated at another table. "Joe," Fowler snapped, "why are you always in the rumble seat of the conversation?"

LORD CAVENDISH, husband of Adele Astaire, has sent his brother to Hollywood to become a movie actor. He's in town now, and will stay with Fred Astaire when he reaches the Coast . . . Hurok's Ballet Russe will appear at the World's Fair here . . . When the "Goldwyn Follies" is completed it will run three hours . . . Sam Goldwyn, who has Joel McCrea under contract, still calls him Joe McReal. "You don't pronounce it correctly," McCrea protested . . . "Look, look, he tells me how to say his name," Goldwyn sneered, "and I'm the one who gave him a two-year contract" . . . Goldwyn started to walk away, turned and added: "With options!"

If you wish to gnash your teeth with envy at Sonja Heinie's fluent grace with a pair of ice skates, you will have a fine time watching her skim over "Thin Ice." The story is a frail, endearing little thing about a masquerading prince who becomes innocently entangled with a demure little skating instructor in a village in the Swiss Alps. There is enough skating by Heinie to make it occasionally superlative. Which would be the times she flashes out with a gay flourish of her skirts and gives the patrons a view of what earned her so many skating titles.

Young Tyrone Power is the prince in disguise. There is a guileless charm about their pretending which will cause countless sighs of "Aren't they sweet?" to rise from the audience. It is not silly, though, just harmless and brimmed with an innocuous, youthful gaiety.

A large supporting cast includes Raymond Walburn and Alan Hale, with George Givot in a microscopic bit. And you will probably be wondering why Joan Davis, the comic singer and dancer, isn't billed for the sort of stuff Martha Raye seems to have a corner on just now.

Trans-Lux

Football almost crowds out the Sino-Japanese war on the Trans-Lux screen this week. But the guns roar above all else and war, with its horrors and devastation, proves a poor commentary on civilization. Of the news shots, the most interesting are the background camera surveys of China's advances in the past ten years, this whole line-up being a part of "March of Time."

The young Franklin Roosevelts, jr., top the national news scene, with the lens snatching peeps at their new Virginia home and the bridal pair settling down after the European honeymoon. American Legion uniforms take second place with the blow-off in New York coming in for plenty of action and variety via the screen. The rest of the national front is auto racing, the coming World's Series, Wall Street tycoons and their seaplaning to work, the usual salmon run in Oregon, Hollywood beauty tips, the fishing contest off Nova Scotia, Jacqueline Cochran setting a new flying record for the ladies and the District high schools taking to the gridiron.

There's a Mexican pictorial that shares honors with a trick cartoon in color that proves you can't make a dignified dish out of a cartoon.

Roosevelt Fails To Assail Foes Of Court Plan

Cheyenne Speech Turns Out to Be Mild Defense of Expenditures.

before the Presidential party left for Yellowstone National Park in rapidly dropping temperature—with snow threatened—Mr. Roosevelt pointed out that under the New Deal $80,000,000 of Federal funds had been spent in Wyoming. He warned, however, that "not nearly so much" will be spent in the State in the next four years because of decreased unemployment. Decreasing relief rolls, he said, were helping him balance the budget.

Perhaps this was meant for Gov. Miller's ears, as he, like other mid-Western executives, sought to impress on the President the need for additional Federal funds in his State. He specifically asked for $150,000 to build a State soldiers and sailors home.

Only Brief Greetings.

Overshadowing all other events of the day, however, was the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt and O'Mahoney toward each other. They met face to face only when O'Mahoney boarded the train in Cheyenne and when he left at Casper. On each occasion nothing more than "hello" and "good-by" was said.

Senator O'Mahoney conceded to newspapermen that Mr. Roosevelt was a great President and that the people of Wyoming were for him. But he insisted the President was wrong on the court issue and he claimed he had support of a majority of Wyoming voters on that issue. O'Mahoney refused to let Mr. Roosevelt snub him and seemed eager to be on friendly terms with the President. The latter on the other hand, displayed no desire for any open break.

The Wyoming crowds which greeted Mr. Roosevelt appeared to like him well enough—although they did not display the same enthusiasm as those in Iowa yesterday. But Wyoming crowds also appeared to like O'Mahoney, in fact, as well as they liked the President.

Whether the President at the last minute shifted ground in his informal Cheyenne speech is not known. But the impression is widespread on this Presidential train that Mr. Roosevelt did not deliver there some of the remarks he had intended when he left his Hyde Park home two days ago.

Furthermore, it is believed among observers aboard this train that if there was a shift in the President's tactics it was because O'Mahoney and his friends in Cheyenne outsmarted Mr. Roosevelt by demonstrating that the people of this State were behind O'Mahoney in his opposition to the court bill, even though they like the President.

Court Fight Expected.

O'Mahoney was in Chicago when White House aides pointedly announced that Mr. Roosevelt's first speech on his transcontinental swing would be at Cheyenne, Wyo. This announcement, supported by subsequent developments, was responsible for the general expectation that the President on entering Wyoming intended to take his Supreme Court fight to the people and to attempt to build backfires of public sentiment against those Democrats who were thwarting him.

Even though he had agreed to address a retail jewelry meeting in Chicago Wednesday night, O'Mahoney cancelled that engagement and set out at once for Cheyenne via automobile with his wife. Driving long hours for three days, he reached Cheyenne late yesterday afternoon.

Then things commenced to happen. First, the story was put out that O'Mahoney had not been invited to board the Presidential special, although his colleague, the New Deal Senator Schwartz, Gov. Miller and Representative Greever had been asked to ride from Cheyenne to Casper.

Papers Put on Train.

This proved embarrassing to the Presidential staff aboard the train. Secretary McIntyre declined to discuss the matter, except to say no "formal invitations" to board the train had been sent to anyone. This incident put the President in the position of snubbing O'Mahoney and added to the belief that in some way he would show his displeasure with the Wyoming Senator in his Cheyenne speech.

But O'Mahoney was still at work, the fruits of which literally hit the President right in the eyes this morning. At daybreak the Cheyenne newspapers were placed aboard the train. Before Cheyenne was reached Mr. Roosevelt had read them.

In bold type, an eight-column streamer across the front page of the Democratic Wyoming Eagle, which has been supporting Mr. Roosevelt since 1931, read as follows:

"State Tense as F. R. Nears Cheyenne."

After a few opening paragraphs the story beneath that headline asserted that "it would seem that the people of Wyoming can see no reason for withdrawing support from either of the men because they have differed on the single point of the Supreme Court issue."

Under the first headline was another which read:

"Democrats to Honor Senator O'Mahoney at Banquet."

It told of a plan "conceived only yesterday" for a dinner in honor of O'Mahoney next Monday night, to be attended by prominent Democrats "as a testimonial of their faith in him and in appreciation of the outstanding service he has rendered both State and Nation."

Doubts Reprisals.

Then there was a lengthy editorial, prominently displayed, in which the Wyoming Eagle recalled how it had been a stanch supporter of the President since 1931, had urged his election in 1932 and 1936, but had disagreed with him regarding the methods of NRA, the wages and hours bill—all of which the editorial asserted "seemed to us undemocratic."

Praising Mr. Roosevelt as a great leader and man of vision, the editorial finally said: "We are convinced that the President will not stoop to reprisal against those who disagree with him."

All these articles had been read and digested aboard the Presidential train before Cheyenne was reached. When Governor Miller entered Mr. Roosevelt's special car he found the President reading The Eagle. And as the train came to a stop in Cheyenne, there was O'Mahoney as a member of the "Citizens Reception Committee for the President."

McIntyre gave him a curt nod and then gave a warmer welcome to Schwartz, standing nearby. But a moment later Mrs. Roosevelt, seeing O'Mahoney, came toward him with broad smile and outstretched hand. Apparently oblivious of the political significance of her action, Mrs. Roosevelt chatted with O'Mahoney several minutes, asking about his wife and his hurried automobile trip.

Mrs. Roosevelt did not know Schwartz, and O'Mahoney apparently derived a great deal of pleasure out of the introduction of his New Deal colleague to the President's wife before the leaders of the State. O'Mahoney went into the President's car with the welcoming committee and reported Mr. Roosevelt had greeted him cordially. Later he stood to the left of the rear platform to hear Roosevelt speak. So did Schwartz. Only Governor Miller stood with the President.

When Mr. Roosevelt started speaking, he was grim faced. There was a deep silence over the Cheyenne station plaza when he asserted:

"Some people wonder why I am here." Many of these present had come expecting the President to take a slap at O'Mahoney and they thought it was now coming. The mild applause which greeted the next sentence or two uttered by the President, however, indicated they were not going to take sides. Mr. Roosevelt's assertion that "I don't want to coast and the Nation doesn't want me to coast with my feet up on the front wheels," drew applause, but not the volume that might be expected. After that Mr. Roosevelt shifted his theme and there was no applause until he was two-thirds through his speech, when he promised the Government was not going broke.

"Government Succeeding."

At Casper, the President asserted that "Constitutional government in this country is succeeding despite the obstacles being placed in its way by those who do not want to see it work."

Democratic processes of government can meet emergencies, the President said. Unless those emergencies are met, he added, uncertainties and fears are likely to result, as they did in 1933. Fears result, too, in dictatorial governments, he declared.

He said he was sure the rank and file of the people in the United States approved "the objectives" of their Government.

8,000 Hungry, Commissioners Called Callous

Hazen's Silence to Appeal Delays School Lunches, Mrs. Boyle Asserts.

Hazen is going to answer, nor what he is going to say," said Mrs. Boyle.

The only donation received by the committee to date is $3,000 pledged yesterday by Opportunity House. But since the campaign is only 2 days old and the "citizens are 100 per cent behind us," Mrs. Boyle is not discouraged.

Business men have pledged their support wholeheartedly, she said. Committee members will meet Monday for lunch at Opportunity House to report on progress made over the week-end.

During its operation, the WPA has furnished the District's children with more than 4,000,000 free lunches. Due to the acuteness of the relief situation, the problem this winter is considered more acute than since Mrs. Doyle led a similar campaign three years ago.

Not Fault of WPA.

"We never have any trouble from the WPA. It is just that they do not have the money this year," she asserted.

Mrs. Mary Steele, WPA official, said school lunches of soup or hot broth, a sandwich or two, one-half pint of milk and fruit could be bought for 7 cents each. The total cost of providing them, including preparation and serving, is 17 cents, she said.

During the peak period last winter the WPA served approximately 8,000 lunches a day.

On the public assistance rolls of the Board of Public Welfare now are about 15,000 cases, of which one-half are children, Director Elwood Street said last night.

Employed on WPA projects in the District—and endeavoring to live on its meager wages—are 5,590 employes.

3,000 Employables Jobless.

This winter the picture is made more desolate by the fact approximately 3,000 employable persons cannot be given WPA jobs, nor yet receive direct relief—which now goes only to unemployables.

Mrs. Boyle pointed out that whereas children might be able to subsist during the summer on relief allotments, they might not be able to meet the additional requirements of winter and study.

"It is absurd to pay a teacher to teach undernourished children who grow more undernourished each day they go without their lunch," she said.

The value of a well-balanced meal in the growth and development of a child was pointed out by Dr. J. A. Murphy, of the District Health Service, who declared "undoubtedly supplemental feeding is needed in the District schools."

A partial survey conducted by the Health Department among children of lower grades last year, Dr. Murphy said, showed 23 per cent of them were victims of substandard nutrition.

Elementary School Problem.

Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of District schools, said the high schools always have been able to take care of the lunch problem by providing work for children who do not have lunch money.

Nursery school lunches provided by the WPA, with the Board of Education as sponsor, are being continued.

Mrs. Doyle said her committee considers it essential to have in sight one-third of the $100,000 needed for the project for a year before starting it.

A plan for a benefit football game at the close of the season is being formulated to help during the "second third." Stars from the various teams of Washington colleges will be teamed against the Redskins, Washington professional team, according to the tentative plan.

The District of Columbia League of Women Voters held a special board meeting yesterday at the Brookings Institute to formulate a program of civic and welfare activities to be presented for approval at the regular board meeting in October.

D. C. Auxiliary Has Thrills at Legion Parley

Hobart Trophy Is Received by Mrs. Killeen for Department.

District of Columbia women who are members of World War organizations or whose husbands, sons or fathers served in the A. E. F. bring glowing tales to Washington from the American Legion and allied organizations conventions in New York City during the past week.

One of the big moments of the convention for the Washington delegates was the presentation of the Hobart trophy to the District department for showing the largest percentage of membership increase since the last convention. Mrs. Mary K. Killeen, the retiring president of the District of Columbia department, received the trophy for her department because it was under her leadership that this national trophy was won. Mrs. Killeen acted as chairman also of the District delegation at the convention.

Mrs. Hobart's Interest Keen.

The Hobart trophy was established by Mrs. Lowell Fletcher Hobart, of Cincinnati, honorary president general of the National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution and the first president and one of the founders of the American Legion Auxiliary.

Mrs. Hobart's interest in the Auxiliary has never flagged and she is received with great acclaim at all its conventions.

During her administration as president general of the D. A. R. its influence on national patriotic matters widened and she was specially interested in the work among children and young people.

Mrs. Hobart did active relief work for soldiers' families during the World War and visited many of the camps and cantonments in the vicinity of Cincinnati. Her membership in the American Legion Auxiliary comes through the fact that her only son, Lowell Fletcher Hobart, jr., was in the A. E. F. overseas.

Applauded in Parade.

In uniforms set off by red hats with ostrich feathers and red capes, nearly 400 members of La Boutique des Huit Chapeaux et Quarante Femmes, the honor and fun society of the American Legion Auxiliary, were on hand for the auxiliary Hotel Astor meetings.

This organization, which corresponds to the Eight and Forty Society of the American Legion, made a striking appearance in the legion parade and was applauded continuously along the line of march.

Among the early arrivals was the national president, who bears the unique title of La Chapeau Nationale. The present incumbent of the office is Mrs. Mollie Averill, of Mount Vernon, Washington.

Membership in the American Legion Auxiliary now is the largest in its history, the count reported at the recent convention being 442,000 members. This is among the largest women's organizations in the country. Mrs. Oscar W. Hahn, of Wayne, Nebr., national president, recently pointed out that the auxiliary is becoming increasingly popular with American women eligible for its membership, as they realize more and more the full scope of its program and that it offers a wide range of activity for women of various temperaments and talents.

"The first purpose of the auxiliary," she said recently, "is, of course, to care for the veterans and their dependents, but I should hate to see the Legion and the auxiliary living solely in the past. Our work includes rehabilitation, child welfare, Americanization and national defense. We should never make the mistake of forgetting the sacrifices and heroism of the World War, but we hope they will not have to be repeated.

Committed to Neutrality.

"We are committed," she concluded, "to support of the Government's neutrality policy, to universal service, which would take the profits out of war, and thus discourage any attempts to entangle this country for selfish motives; also to national defense at the proper strength and to avoiding entanglements with either fascism or communism. We see nations going to war to determine which of these two systems shall prevail abroad, and we are determined that this country shall not become entangled with either."

During the past year Mrs. Hahn said the American Legion Auxiliary has been active in support of the boys' State projects, similar to military training schools, but with the emphasis on the civilian rather than military life. Here boys are in camps, in civic units, with governors, mayors and judges.

Among the Washington women at the American Legion Auxiliary convention were Mrs. Mary B. McMillin, Mrs. Virginia McCarthy, Mrs. Mirian Austin, Miss Estelle Black, Mrs. Kathleen Abreo, Mrs. Helen Ware, Mrs. A. Helen Horton, Mrs. Della Knock, Miss Henrietta McKay, Mrs. Maudie Brunson, Mrs. E. Louise Warren, department secretary, and Mrs. Dorothy B. Harper.

Text of President Roosevelt's Address at Cheyenne

By the Associated Press.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Sept. 24.—Following is a stenographic text of President Roosevelt's speech at Cheyenne Today:

Gov. Miller, Gov. Ammons of Colorado, and, I think I can say, my good old friends of Cheyenne—because, as you know, since 1932 Cheyenne has been on my annual visiting list.

Some of you may wonder why I am here today. Back in January, 1937, of this year, a friend of mine came to me and said, "Why during the next four years don't you take it easy? Why don't you coast? You came up a long steep grade for the last four years and now, during the next four years, you might have as well a good time?

Well, I said to him that I was going to continue during these four years the practice of the last four. And that, incidentally, in so doing I would have a good time.

I do not want to coast, and the Nation does not want me to coast, my feet upon the front wheels. I have thought it was a part of the duty of the Presidency to keep in touch, personal touch, with the Nation, and so this year since January I have already made one trip through a number of Southern States on my way back from catching some fish and now I am going out to the Coast for the third time since have been President, not counting campaign trips—going out to take a "look-see" to try to tie together in my own mind the problems of the Nation in order that I may, at first hand, know as much about the questions that affect all of the 48 States as possible.

As you know, the greater part of the emergency is over—not all of it, because there are still a great many difficult problems—and I want to talk to you very briefly about some of the things that the National Government has done and is doing.

For example, we, during the past three or four years, have spent in every part of the country a great deal of Federal money—in putting people to work. That is the primary objective. But at the same time we have tried our utmost to accomplish useful things, and there is not a State, or a very, very few communities in the whole Nation, that have not been benefitted by these Federal expenditures, not in a temporary way, but in a permanent way.

I was thinking this morning of the question of airports, and I do not know whether it is thoroughly realized, but you are one of the stations on one main transcontinental airline, and you know that the Federal Government has assisted in the actual building, not of several dozen new airports in the country, not several hundred but many, many thousands with the result today that the United States is checkerboarded with airports in every State. That is an accomplishment of the past three or four years. And in the same way not dozens or hundreds, but thousands of schools have been built or renovated with a combination of State and Federal funds.

We have to come some day to an end of the greater part of that program and just the other day in Washington we allocated the last of the Federal money for public works projects. Those consisted of more schools, more sewer systems, and more water works and things of that kind, where there was a very clear need for replacement or where the States or localities had already voted bonds.

I will tell you one amusing story of the allocation for school projects. Congress told me to confine them to those schools or to those places where the schools had been burned down or where new schools had to be built to replace buildings that were about to tumble down, and there came a project from one of the Southern States for the building in that community of a new school building and a new library. The new school building was to replace one which was about to tumble down, and we granted the project, but in the case of the library, they apparently did not have a library and it was not a replacement and with great regret we rejected the application.

The head of the school came to Washington to see me, and I told him how sorry I was, but that we could not spend Federal funds just for new buildings, no matter how much they were needed, unless they were to replace something that had been burned down.

He said: "Mr. Roosevelt, our library was burned down."

I said: "That is funny, because there is nothing said about that in the application. When was it burned down?"

And he came back and said: "Mr. President, our library was burned in 1864 by Gen. Sherman."

And so, on this trip, I am looking at many, many types of projects. I am always keen when I come West to get more people out of the East to come West and see things with their own eyes.

The other day I read in a great newspaper of the Middle West an editorial that took as its text the fact that one of the WPA projects—a dam, I think, in Kansas—a part of it had washed out, with undoubtedly the loss of a good deal of money, and pointed out that this was the way that the Federal Government was wasting its funds. I believe you know that engineers are human, just like I am, and that they do not make a home run every time they come to bat.

But the editorial went on, taking that as a text, and pointed out from their point of view, which I do not believe is the point of view of the nation, that in the construction of these great dams by the Federal Government we are creating millions of kilowatts of power which will never be used by the people. I think that you and I and most people realize that when you do create power the public finds some useful way to use it.

In the same way they went on to tell the people that these reclamation projects are a pure waste of money—that by building projects like Casper-Alcova or Grand Coulee we put in use unnecessary farm lands, that there was enough good farm land in the United States to take care of all the people who needed it for fifty years to come. You and I know that is not so. You hear on this great central highway, and know, of a number of people, families, who have had to leave their homes and farms in the drought area, some of them from the eastern part of this State, from the Dakotas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas—people who could not make a go of it on poor land forced to leave their homes to avoid starvation—and those people have headed farther west, looking for a chance to earn their livelihood, looking for good land, and not being able to find it.

So, in the same way, there are thousands of families in the East who are unable to make good on the land they are tilling now for very obvious reasons. It is land that ought not to be put under the plow. And so, for these families, I believe it is the duty of the Federal Government and the State government to provide them with land, where it is possible to do it, where they can make a living.

And so I could go on talking about WPA and PWA and soil erosion and the CCC camps. As a matter of fact it has all served a pretty useful purpose. It is a better country for having spent for a few years more than we were taking in in taxes; and do not let anybody deceive you—the Government of the United States is not going broke.

So here I am, on this short trip—for it must be short—trying to get a cross-section point of view, the point of view especially of the rank and file of the American people of this Western country.

Yes, it is a part of the duty of the Presidency to represent, insofar as possible, all the people, not just Democrats, but Republicans as well, not just rich people, but poor people as well.

And I have been trying very simply to do the most good for the greatest number. Out here, in the cattle country and the sugar beet country, of course I am interested in the prosperity of the raisers of cattle and the growers of beets. Perhaps somewhere down in my heart I am a little bit more interested in the ten men who have 100 head of cattle apiece than I am in the one man who has 1,000 head of cattle, and perhaps I am a little bit more interested in the ten men who have 100 acres of beets apiece than I am in the one man who has 1,000 acres of beets.

It seems to me that that is one of the necessary things that go with the Presidency, and we, in the past four years, have tried, I think honestly and I think fairly successfully, to do the greatest good for the greatest number. And so, in these next few years, four years, eight years, 12 years, 20 years, I am very firmly convinced that the people of the Nation have more and more a national point of view.

You people out here realize, far better than you did four years ago, that your prosperity is tied up very intimately with the prosperity of the cotton growers of the South, and with the industrial workers of the East, and in the same way, those people in the great factories of the East and the Middle West and on the cotton farms of the South, and in the corn belt, and in the wheat belt, they know that their prosperity is affected by your prosperity out here. That, I believe, will be written in history as a great accomplishment of these years we are living in now—the welding together of the people of the United States.

And so, my friends, I am glad to have been able to come out here on this annual trip, and I hope and expect to come out during the next three years again.

Senorita de Los Rios Skips Society for Study

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Small wonder, that, with a father whose string of degrees asks no odds from any diplomat's, and a mother whose background is also scholarly, Senorita Laura de los Rios, daughter of the Spanish Ambassador and Senora de los Rios, has decided to skip the Capital's social season this year in order to study toward a higher college degree.

HOPE R. MILLER.

She has gone to New York to enroll at Columbia University, where her father was once a lecturer. She will come back to the Capital on week-end trips, but expects to be pretty busy studying even then.

An intellectual young lady who is proud of the fact that she once taught school in Madrid, Senorita de los Rios is carrying out family tradition in continuing her education. Her great-uncle, Don Francisco Giner de los Rios, gained fame as a Spanish teacher and philosopher and founded one of the oldest progressive schools in Europe, the Institucion Libre de Ensenanza, at Madrid. Her father's distinguished career has included teaching in a number of world-famous universities, writing more than a score of scholarly books and the holding of such posts as the administration of foreign affairs and the rectorship of the University of Madrid before he was announced Ambassador to this country.

Her mother, who not long ago remarked, "We are all teachers in my family," not only followed that vocation in her youth, but has also translated and written a number of books on history and geography. At present, she is working on an account of life in the United States, illustrated with photographs, which she sends to principals of schools in Spain, with the hope that school children in that war-stricken country will have the opportunity to learn more about the United States.

So Senorita de los Rios, it seems, in deciding to forego a winter of party-giving and party-attending for the more serious pursuit of working on a thesis for her master's degree, is merely carrying on—according to patterns already followed by other members of her family. Incidentally, the Ambassador and Senora de los Rios, and the latter's mother, Dona Laura Giner de los Rios, are extending their stay at Gibson Island for a few days. They expect to return to the Embassy on Sixteenth street some time next week.

Other news from the Spanish Embassy is to the effect that the Second Secretary, Juan Antonio Meana, and Senora de Meana are on their way to Mexico City, where on special invitation he will conduct the National Symphony Orchestra when it plays some of his compositions. They are expected back in the Capital next month.

Mention of diplomats reminds me that the Austrian Minister and Mme. Prochnik have gone to Philadelphia to spend the week-end as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Gustave Heckscher at their home near there; that the Norwegian Minister, Wilhelm Munthe de Morgenstierne, is scheduled to sail today on the Bergensfjord for this country and will land about October 4; that Mme. Jorgen Galbe, wife of the Counselor of the Norwegian Legation, will also return on the same ship from an extended visit in her homeland; and that the Irish Minister, Michael MacWhite, having fully recovered from his recent illness, is expected to return from Saratoga Wednesday.

Mrs. Crounse, who was born in Galveston, Tex., came several years ago, to Washington, and her long residence here has entitled her to membership in the city's so-called set of "cave dwellers." Her large home on Wyoming avenue was frequently the scene of literary gatherings. Mrs. Crounse, herself, has published several volumes of poetry, among them being "Through Remembered Windows" and "Fold of Dreams." The former book was a collection of her memories of her childhold which was spent in the southwest and in Mexico. Her pen name is Pepita Crounse, the first part being the Mexican diminutive for Josephine.

Mr. Stinson after his graduation from Columbia, where he specialized in architecture and civil engineering, became attached to the State Department here as attorney in the Latin-American division. He also studied art in Italy and is well known for his work in water color. He has exhibited in New York, Philadelphia, at the Chicago Art Museum, and at the Corcoran Gallery of Art. He is also the author of numerous works on the League of Nations and the World Court. He was formerly married to Harriet McKee Stinson.

Engagement to Senor Benitez Will Be Announced Tomorrow.

ST. MATTHEW'S CHURCH will be the scene of a brilliant wedding early in January when Miss Graciela Trucco, daughter of the Chilean Ambassador, Senor Don Manuel Trucco, will be married to Senor Don Fernando Illanes Benitez, former Second Secretary of the Chilean Embassy in Washington. The father of the bride-to-be will make official announcement of his daughter's engagement at a party at his summer home in Bluemont, Va., tomorrow.

Miss Trucco will have her two sisters, Senorita Marta and Rebeca Trucco, as attendants in her wedding, and Miss Olga Patterson, daughter of the late Guillermo Patterson, one-time Cuban Ambassador, will also be a bridesmaid. Miss Patterson has been visiting the Truccos for the past six months. The Misses Gloria and Maruca Sacasa, daughters of the former President of Nicaragua, are also expected to be in the wedding party.

The Misses Trucco have served as their father's hostesses since his arrival in this country in 1933. All three are interested in music, and the bride-to-be sings and plays the guitar. With their father they will return to the embassy here from Bluemont the first of the month.

The last large diplomatic wedding held in Washington was that of the former Valerie Prochnik, daughter of the Austrian Minister, and Mme. Prochnik, to John de Sibour, of Washington. The marriage of Zoe Patterson, daughter of the late Guillermo Patterson, to Ernest Schlatter, of the Swiss Legation, was another brilliant affair, taking place in the winter of 1936 at the Cuban Embassy. Mme. Schlatter is a close friend of the Senoritas Trucco.

Senor Don Benitez is now Chilean Vice Consul in New York.

Preston Moore Is Engaged in Tahiti To Frenchwoman

From far-off Tahiti comes news of the engagement of Preston Moore, whose former home here is now the Canadian legation, to Madelaine Guilbert Purt, a young lady of French birth who resides on that South Sea island.

The news should interest those who knew the late Clarence Moore, father of the future bridegroom, and one of the social and civic leaders of Washington before his death on the Titanic. A picture of him, dressed in hunting clothes, hangs over the fireplace at the Chevy Chase Club, of which he was a very active member.

Representative Leaves.

Miss Smith Wed To Denver Man

Yesterday at a brilliant wedding at New York's ultra-fashionable St. Thomas' Church on Fifth avenue, Miss Janet Alice Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert E. Smith, of New York, became the bride of Gerald Hughes Phipps, son of the former Senator from Denver, and Mrs. Lawrence Phipps. After the reception which took place at the Ritz following the ceremony, they left for a trip through the Panama Canal. They will reside in Denver.

Miss Gertrude Levis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Levis, of Southport, Conn., was maid of honor. The bridesmaids were Miss Coralie Barry, of Abbeyleix, Rumson, N. Y.; Miss Angela McCosker and Miss Barbara Brooks, of Minneapolis, Minn.; Miss Alice Norma Shea, of New York; Miss Evelyn Denison, of Rosemont, Pa.; Mrs. Allen R. Phipps, a sister-in-law of the bridegroom, and the Misses Dorothy Parr and Geraldine Jackson.

Allen R. Phipps served as best man. Among the ushers were Sanford C. Smith and Herbert E. Smith, brothers of the bride; Leonard Patterson, of Hollywood; Mark Chapman Wheeler, of Wakefield, Mass.; Alfred Swartz, jr., of Haverford, Pa.; Nelson McInnich, of Kansas City, Mo.; Richard S. Stark, of New York; Carl Stitzer Goodbody, of Toledo, Ohio; and Lawrence T. Myers, of Santa Monica, Calif.

Miss Youngblood, Mrs. Moore to Sail

Miss Frances Youngblood and Mrs. Mary Malone Moore are sailing Tuesday on the Europa for Europe, where they will spend two months traveling and visiting friends.

They expect to land in England and go by plane from London to Paris, where they will participate in the dedication of the American monument at Chateau-Thierry. Later they will tour Belgium, Germany, Holland, Switzerland and Italy. From Rome they will fly across the Adriatic to be the guests of the United States Minister to Albania, Dr. Hugh G. Grant, and Mrs. Grant at the American Legation in Tirana.

Miss Prentice Will Wed Mr. Gilbert

The engagement of Miss Mary Adeline Prentice, granddaughter of the late John D. Rockefeller, to Benjamin Davis Gilbert, of Clayville, N. Y., was announced yesterday by Miss Prentice's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Parmalee Prentice, of New York and Williamstown.

Mrs. Prentice, who has frequently visited in Washington with her daughter, is the former Miss Alta Rockefeller, daughter of the late oil magnate. No date has been set for the wedding.

Arrive From England.

Miss Edith White and Miss C. Cole, of Bristol England, are guests at the Dodge while in the capital, as are Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Newhall, of Stoneham, Mass. Mrs. S. D. Camp, of Mexico City, is also a guest at the Dodge.

About the Town

With Dudley Harmon

JUST WHEN pretty nearly everybody seemed to have drifted back into town for the winter, half the population appears to have turned gypsy and wandered off again. Keeping track of all these people is discouraging and makes this year's season seem unusually slow in getting under way.

DUDLEY HARMON.

Among those out of town is Mrs. Emory Sands, who is in Atlantic City for a brief vacation before returning early next month to the Anchorage, where she will make her home. While she hasn't got a regular office, Mrs. Sands is one of the busiest women in Washington these days as Washington representative of the New York World's Fair. In this capacity it is her job to whip up interest among the "furriners" in our midst for participation in this coming event.

NO SOONER did Thomas Bell Sweeney arrive here a few days ago from Bar Harbor than he kept on going, and is now in Charles Town, W. Va., to visit his son and daughter-in-law. Mrs. Sweeney, jr., is the former Alicia Rodgers, daughter of Mrs. Philip Owen Coffin.

But tomorrow will see Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney settled in their home at 1520 New Hampshire avenue, where the head of the house returns tomorrow. Mrs. Sweeney, who has been stopping at the Ritz Carlton in New York en route here from her Maine summer home, is due back in the Capital this evening.

* * * *

OTHERS who are arriving today include the Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Lucet, who have been touring New England and Canada. And while on the subject of diplomats, Mme. Wankowicz, wife of the Counselor of the Polish Embassy, is back from a summer in quiet Eaglesmere, Pa. When the Ambassador, Jerzy Potocki, returns early in October from a holiday abroad, and the Attache, Rafal Lepkowski, docks October 7 in New York after a vacation in Poland, the personnel of this embassy will be complete. That is, except for the attractive wife of the Ambassador, Countess Potocka, who will not join her husband until later in the season.

James L. Houghteling, like so many Washingtonians, now has a new address. He has leased the home of Dr. and Mrs. A. Y. P. Garnett, a big gray stone edifice at 2424 Wyoming avenue.

Mr. Houghteling's recent appointment as Commissioner of Immigration added some more Roosevelt connections to a city already abounding in members of this clan. Mrs. Houghteling, who has just arrived from Chicago, was before her marriage Laura Delano, and is the daughter of Frederick Delano, who is related to the President.

Dr. and Mrs. Garnett, who for several years have preferred to live elsewhere than in their Wyoming avenue residence, will continue to make their home at the Chevy Chase Club.

ALTHOUGH some of her guests never got there, owing to traffic complications caused by the American Legion convention, Mrs. Borge Rohde's recent tea in her new apartment in New York was a huge success, according to accounts. One of the intended guests who didn't make the grade was Carl Crow, author of "Four Hundred Million Customers," the new book about consumers in China.

Those who did get there, however, included Helen Rudd, youngest daughter of the former Ruth Bryan Owen; Fannie Hurst, who needs no identification, and Mrs. Jesse Lasky, wife of the movie producer. Mrs. Lasky, a self-taught artist, is holding a one-woman show of 17 flower pictures at Knoedler's gallery this month.

Tea was served in true Danish style—Mrs. Rohde grew very fond of the customs of the country to which she was Minister until her marriage to the handsome Captain Rohde. The guests, who were all women, sat around the dining room table and munched plates of Danish pastry.

TWO BRIDES-TO-BE who will walk down the aisle on Saturday, October 2, have completed plans for their weddings.

St. Alban's Church on that day will be the scene of the marriage of Miss Agatha Varela, daughter of Edwin A. Varela and Raymond Bryan, son of Mr. and Mrs. George C. Bryan, of Stamford, Conn.

Miss Varela has chosen as her maid of honor her sister, Miss Helen Varela. Her bridesmaids will be Miss Virginia Bryan, of Stamford, Conn., sister of the prospective bridegroom; Miss Harriet Parks, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and Miss Hazel Kirk and Miss Elizabeth Rogers, of Washington.

William McIntire, of Manchester, N. H., will serve as best man for Mr. Bryan, and ushers will be Arthur Varela, brother of the bride, Robert Shaw, of Lowell, Mass., cousin of Mr. Bryan, and Harold Slick and Arnold Fort, of Washington.

Another who will become a bride on October 2 is Miss Doris Lucille Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Hall. Her fiance is Herbert Donald Laut, son of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Laut, of Sligo Park Hill, Md.

The Rev. R. W. White will officiate at the ceremony, which will take place at the Methodist Protestant Church, First street and Rhode Island avenue.

Miss Louis Stuart will be the bride's only attendant, and Dr. Grant Hagan will be best man.

Immediately following the ceremony there will be a wedding dinner at which the bride's parents will be host and hostesses. Members of the immediate families and the bridal parties will be present.

After finishing McKinley High School, Miss Hall attended American University. She is a member of Alpha Sigma Chi Sorority. Mr. Laut is a graduate of Central High School and Columbia Technical School.

Miss Louise Carey, Niece of Former Senator, Married

The marriage of Miss Louise David Carey to Francis John Bon, which took place September 16 in Meadow, Wyo., is announced by the bride's aunt, Mrs. Robert Davis Carey, widow of Senator Carey, of Wyoming.

The former Miss Carey, who frequently visited in Washington, as the guest of her aunt and uncle, has many friends in Washington. Mr. Bon was Senator Carey's secretary and is a graduate of Notre Dame University. He also attended Harvard Law School.

They will make their home in Cheyenne, Wyo., after October 15.

F STREET AT FOURTEENTH

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Sept. 24.

THE MOST amazing edifice—oh, all right, building—in this town is one devoted to the art of millinery, or hat architecture. A whole building, no less—the dream creature of Mme. Lilly Dache, the cutest Frenchwoman upon whom these eyes have ever rested—and that means a lot.

ALICE HUGHES.

It was opened to the public the other day—in a pouring rain. A very smart joint indeed, and an anvil's toss from Park avenue, if that means anything. It has been decorated in the most simple and lovely fashion by the British Mr. Gibbings, a tall, weedy, blond boy who has scorned adornment and depended on the rich beauty of the materials used. For instance, the keynote of the main showroom is a life-size Bhudda, and carrying out the Oriental theme are lovely Chinese girls attendants in native costume.

And the opening burst of the Dache Emporium was a fashion show which topped them all. No less than 150 mannequins paraded, wearing Lilly's hats, and dresses by Jonal, who inhabits one floor of the building. It also contains a fancy beauty parlor and several other departments which contribute to the ornamentation of our sex.

When you visit us, a trip to the Dache building is obligatory. Its simple beauty is smiting, and it contains everything you will need to put you in a perfect shape for your visit to the Rainbow Room—that is, if you are in a mood to check in at Jack Rockefeller's venture in the saloon business!

• • • •

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—At Dache's housewarming, the night of her opening, I saw one of those unhappy coincidences. Sylvia Sidney, the darling litle film star, and Cora Scovil, ace of mannequin makers, turned up in identical dresses—deep red, with low-cut V necks, draped fronts, and gold and rhinestone buckles. To climax it, they were introduced, passed it off with howls of laughter, and made nothing of it. Women used to go frantic about such things. Evidently, no more! . . .

• • • •

Pals of Russel Wright, the industrial designer who lives near me here on dear old Murray Hill, are enjoying his vittles, using the bamboo-handled cutlery he has recently designed. They are very handsome eating tools, and I do not doubt that meat and potatoes taste better with them . . .

• • • •

Gelett Burgess, venerable humorist, just joined the pep-up school of authors. His book, "Look Eleven Years Younger," has that box-office sound, as who doesn't want to accomplish that feat? Here are the things he criticizes us for, as public sins—foot-fiddling, chin-plucking, ear-pulling, ankle-teetering and inside-cheek-chewing. These things, says Burgess, add to our age. I'm sorry, old "Purple Cow" author—I'm afraid it's years! . . . There is a rumor afoot here that the famous "Romance," which made Doris Keane a star and plagued her for many years, will be revived on Broadway this season, with Eugenie Leontovich, of "Grand Hotel" fame, in the Keane role. Wonder how the old Edward Sheldon show will wear. It ran in London almost throughout the war, and made Keane the dream girl of the British capital.

• • • •

Our fancier women—in the best sense of the word—are going in for "documented jewelry." That means that every piece carries its family history, and one of the Fifth avenue stores is specializing in it. Most of the pieces are unusual, pearl earrings from Vienna, silver charm bracelets from Old World peasants, and so on. Of course, we can do without the "documents." Any old diamond without a pedigree will satisfy most of us!

Dark Fur Trimming.

Daytime or Evening, After the Paris Manner

By Margaret Wallace

DOMESTIC service has had a long history in the annals of mankind. From early times certain of the population have been "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for their more fortunate brethren. Out of this long service has grown a definite code of behavoir, as is true of most human occupations.

Today most homemakers are concerned primarily with the efficiency of the maid servant rather than to her response to certain rules of etiquette. Yet the status of domestic workers can be raised if women entering this occupation know more about the rules that should govern their behavoir and if their mistresses also are aware of what may be justly expected of the domestic workers in their homes.

As for the maids themselves, they will find that by knowing just what should be expected of them they can make themselves indispensable to their employers. Thus, not only their value but their earning capacity will be increased.

Of course, no two households are exactly alike. The same rules may not apply to all of them but there is a general scheme of behavoir on the part of domestic workers which is bound to bring out a better understanding between themselves and their employers.

One of the first lessons in etiquette for a maid servant is to teach her how to answer the telephone correctly. When she picks up the telephone she should say quietly: This is Mrs. B.'s residence. Who is calling please?".

In case the mistress is not at home then the maid should say "I am sorry Mrs. B. is not at home at present."

Any message given should be carefully recorded and delivered. In the case of long-distance collect calls the maid should be instructed to tell the operator the hour when her mistress will be at home rather than attempt to take it herself. This, of course, applies equally to collect telegrams.

The etiquette of the dining room is quite definite where the maids are concerned. Dinner or any other meal should be announced in a few words and the maid should stand at the door when she declares that "Dinner is served."

The waitress or maid never should wear short sleeves or jewelry such as dangling bracelets or earrings while serving a meal.

In refilling a water or wine glass the maid never should lift the glass at the guest's plate.

At formal dinners, the maid does not place bread and butter plates. For butter is not served at formal dinners. It is not necessary because cold hard breads are served that do not require butter.

Food should be passed without any visible excitement or anxiety over the type of service which is being rendered by the maid.

Alligator Handbags And Shoes Are Matched

Bags are fashioned like miniature umbrellas at the same shop and large stitched envelope bags are shown in dark colors, rich tans and bright hues in smooth leathers and suedes.

By Ida Jean Kain.

IT IS the fashion to eat wisely and well—within your calorie limits. Modern reducing is individualized down to the last calorie. Do you knew the exact number of calories by which you can lose one to two pounds per week and feel better?

It has been estimated that the average sedentary male worker will spend around 2,500 calories per day. The calorie requirement is about the same per pound of body weight for men and for women, but since women average about four-fifths as much weight, their calorie requirement is less. On an average, women require from 2,000 to 2,400 calories per day.

Without exercise you burn about 14 calories per pound of body weight per day. With light exercise the calorie expenditure increases, and you burn 15 to 18 calories per pound of body weight. This means that the average man weighing 150 pounds will burn around 2,500 calories per day. The average woman weighing around 130 pounds will burn 2,100 calories per day.

If you are overweight, you have taken more than your daily share of calories. Each excess pound of body weight means 4,000 stored calories, since it takes that many to make a pound.

Now, the scientific way to burn these stored calories is to use only two-thirds your actual calorie requirement. Two-thirds of 2,500 calories, or approximately 1,600 calories, constitutes the average daily reducing diet for men; two-thirds of 2,100 calories makes the average reducing diet for women 1,400 calories per day.

Since 1,400 calories is a leberal allowance, and since many of you are normal weight at less than 130 pounds, I keep the daily allowance at approximately 1,250 per day. If, on this number, you lose more than one to two pounds per week you should increase your daily calorie allowance.

By Nancy Ellis.

A TRIP to the market gives stimulating ideas for menu planning. It is a week for fresh vegetables and fruits. In a riot of color they are monopolizing the market. The early fall has rushed the season. The fall vegetables are making their appearance alongside last summer's favorites.

The modern facilities of transportation has made it possible to bring in from all climes different species of each type of fruit. This is a boon to the discriminating housewife, for she can now select the type of vegetable best suited to her menu and she can plan many interesting and colorful vegetable plates and salads.

In the case of onions, there are four different varieties available. There are large Spanish and Bermuda onions for baking and stuffing, the cooking onion whose strong flavor makes it valuable in seasoning, the small white onion for creaming and the young, green-topped "spring" onions for salad.

Limas and fresh blackeyed peas are coming in in abundance from North Carolina. Broccoli, cauliflower and Brussels sprouts are more inexpensive and of better quality than last week. Early fall cabbage, mild-flavored and green, and the savory or curley cabbage whose vivid green color and tender texture is prized, are excellent "buys."

The fall vegetables, such as parsnips, pumpkins, kale, turnips and fall spinach are beginning to come in.

Squash in four varieties are here. Hubbard squash, golden crooknecks, patty-pan and Zucchini, or Italian, bring variety to the menu. Sauteed Zucchini is a treat that you will long remember.

Housewives who have time to do preserving will certainly want to use the small yellow "egg" tomatoes for a few sweet preserves while they are still available. Another best for winter jellies is the old-fashioned crab apples. At one market some white heath peaches were discovered. As you know, these are the type for brandied and pickled peaches, as they cling to the stones after they are canned.

Fresh grapes of several kinds are available for the fruit bowl. Along with the red and black tokays and green seedless grapes are the more unusual muscat grapes and cornichons. The cornichon grapes are similar in taste to the tokays, but the muscat drip with sugar. These are the variety used for raisins.

The first grapefruit of the new season has started to come in. They are large in size and more sweet than first arrivals in other years.

Plums are having their fling. Damsons from New York State are on the market. These are excellent for pies and for sweet plum preserves. From California come Italian plums and the large green gage and presidents.

Grimes golden apples and Stark's Delicious are the eating apples available this week and summer ramboes are the cooking apples.

Out-of-season strawberries, raspberries and blueberries are expensive but of good quality. The season for Persian melons is almost over, but honeydews and Rockey Ford cantaloupes are still coming in in goodly numbers.

A trip to any market or local grocery makes menu planning a pleasure this week.

Here are some suggestions for vegetables plates: Baker Spanish onions stuffed with chopped meat, creamed new potatoes and buttered spinach garnished with sliced egg. Another combination would be eggplant casserole, sliced new beets and broccoli with Hollandaise sauce. Substitutes can be made according to the taste of the family. The piece de resistance should be a special dish which blends with vegetables with a protein food.

Shoestring carrots, buttered fresh peas and cubed potatoes form a colorful trio for an autumn dinner. For a final touch, add a rich cream sauce to the potatoes and blend flecks of chopped parsley with the carrots.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Treatment of Athletes.

When an injury occurs to a player during a game, the first question that arises is whether he can continue play at all, then whether he can continue play without treatment or first aid.

It always is wise to be on the safe side, especially in football. The player warmed up to the game and keen to continue, or the spectators who know the injured one is a flash player, will tend to bias the trainer's judgment. Many a trainer, however, has rued the moment he let himself be swayed to such influences.

Small bruises may not disqualify, but any abrasion of the skin should be treated with iodine or other antiseptic, and covered by a sterile dressing before play is resumed.

No great hurry is necessary. Nothing will be lost by a calm appraisal of the situation. The player should be asked just how the injury was received, the location affected and how it feels. The player should lie still while this investigation takes place. Movement may be serious. The affected area should be carefully examined for any deformity, swelling or tenderness.

In high school especially, I believe any injury around a joint—ankle, knee, shoulder, elbow—should call for the removal of the player from the game. High school teams do not have very often the advantage of a medical attendant, and the tendency of the average trainer or coach is to ascribe any injury to "just a strain," or "just a wrench." The idea behind this is to toughen the young hopeful. That may be all right, but I'd like to be sure that the "strain" or "wrench" wasn't a broken bone or a dislocated cartilage or a sprain.

Head injuries should be cause for taking the player out. The treacherous thing about them is that after a preliminary period of dizziness everything may seem quite clear for a while, only to reveal the effects of added strain afterward.

Ruptured muscles are far commoner than is supposed. One typical one is "tennis leg," which is a rupture of the calf muscles, or a tear of the large tendon going to the heel. The history of such cases is typical. At the time the player springs or attempts to spring, or suddenly turns the body with the legs held straight, he produces a sharp twist of the muscles. Tennis players feel a surprising sudden pain in the calf as though hit by a stone, and then fall to the ground. They can hardly be convinced that they were not hit by a stone. They think the fall ruptured the muscle, but the rupture was primary. These ruptures can be repaired surgically.

BACON AND TOMATO GRILL. Spread large rounds of toast with butter to which a little Worcestershire sauce is added. Place a slice of broiled tomato on each round of toast. Cover tomato with scrambled eggs and grilled bacon. Garnish with thin slices of green pepper.

Boiled frosting often becomes grainy because of overcooking or stirring while cooking. Add one teaspoon of vinegar for each cup of sugar and cook the mixture only until a fine thread forms when a portion is poured from a spoon.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Wife Who Dallied With Neighbor's Husband Now Feels So Soiled She Can't Eat or Sleep; Asks Help.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: When steeped in shame and remorse over a despicable, ugly act, is it ever possible to hold one's head up again before the world? How does one do it? I wrote you a couple of months ago, but, just as I feared, my experience must have been too sordid to consider in your column. During the weeks since writing you I have struggled to keep my mind free of the ugliness, but the picture is almost always before me in all its vivid details and I cry (inwardly when my husband is with me; outwardly when I am alone) for relief. My husband is always reminding me of Landor's quatrain beginning, "I strove with none, for none was worth my strife——" and still I fret.

Maybe I'm over-dramatizing my own importance in the scheme of things, but there are times when I want to drop on the ground before all that self-righteous family and grovel and plead for forgiveness. I even have desires (probably not sincere ones, or I'd act on them and not just talk about them) to take my life. All this so nearly approaches hysteria that it frightens me.

* * * *

You see, more than five years ago I did "go to pieces" and I dread more than anything the utter hopelessness one feels during such period. During that siege I married a man involuntarily and without my conscious wish. I was too dazed then to do anything but cry over it. It was all for the best, however, for no woman could have a more understanding and loving husband. Almost immediately he took me to the Washington Life Adjustment Center and a psychiatrist there helped me. Another time, too, he helped me to clear up a few minor worries so that I was as happy, as nearly normal, as I suppose it is possible for one like me to be.

* * * *

Yet now I feel that I cannot go back to that psychiatrist. I'd be ashamed for him to know I would deliberately be so contemptible. I had acquired a rather wholesome and normal love relationship with my husband, but lately it has become almost revolting through serving as a constant reminder of that other ugly experience. For my husband's sake I must regain normalcy. Won't you help me? Isn't there some book I might read to help me out of this maze? I can't eat, sleep or think of anything but my own smallness, cheapness and sinfulness. Please help me. Thank you.

MAGDALEN.

What to Believe.

DEAR MAGDALEN: Your first letter (somewhat expurgated, it is true) was published and answered in this column under date of July 18 last. I told you then, as I tell you now, that though you may have participated, impulsively or ignorantly, in a shaming, unworthy experience, there is no sane reason why you should permit that experience to poison your whole existence. It seems to me you are suffering from shock. Your first business is to get your nerves under control, and when your general health is better you will be able to live down this unfortunate experience with comparative ease.

* * * *

Don't be such a petty-prideful coward as to let shame keep you from consulting a psychiatrist. Remember that any psychiatrist's attitude toward problems of this type is scientifically detached and impersonal. Remember that he is schooled in understanding reckless, erratic, passionately emotional conduct, and that there is little, if anything, you might tell him which will evoke surprise or the puritan's inclination to condemn on purely moral or conventional grounds.

* * * *

As you told the story in your first letter, you became fascinated quite against your will by a married man and neighbor who paid you most extravagant and provocative court while claiming to be out of love with and callously neglected by his wife. Puritanical in your standards and conduct, nevertheless you came to the conclusion that you "worshiped" him; kept a clandestine appointment with him one afternoon, and in sheer naive generosity, permitted him considerable liberty in love making, although technically you remained faithful to your husband. Afterward, his wife came to you; told you her husband had confessed everything; had said he never was and never could be in love with you and had been interested only "in seeing how far you would go."

* * * *

Now you feel too soul-stained to live. You are "afraid, ashamed and humble." Although the man and his wife have left town, you dread the "long, accusing looks" which you fancy members of two branches of his family still living in the community level at you. Now, it is my opinion that such a husband and such a wife are creatures of an order so low that their personal opinion of one—be it good or ill—isn't worth a snap of one's finger. And if their respective families belong to the same ilk the same may be said of them.

* * * *

Your husband, you told me, says that you shouldn't care what they think or say; and furthermore freely affirms that he always has trusted you and always will. He wants you to pretend gaiety and you think you should show contrition, lest they think such conduct is usual with you. I think you should act as if you had some vestige of common sense. In short, let bygones be by-gones; snap out of your self-commiserating woe and give your husband something of the break he deserves.

* * * *

What I think you need, more than anything else, is complete emotional and social re-education, such as only a good psychiatrist could give you in a long-drawn-out series of conferences. I think you have a painfully distorted idea of the whole panorama of life; and of the relationship of men and women to each other. The root cause of your trouble, I have no doubt, will be found in a pitifully erroneous mental and psychic approach to the subject of sex. This, probably, was at the bottom of your first nervous collapse; was the factor which necessitated your husband's taking you to a psychiatrist shortly after marriage, and is almost altogether responsible for your hysterical breast-beating and hand-wringing over this comparatively recent romantic disillusionment.

* * * *

I can name a book which, if it doesn't help you, will at least do you no harm. It is Floyd Dell's "Love in the Machine Age." It will give you a truer picture than you have held to date of yourself against the back-drop of recorded history; and, incidentally, it may serve to transform your self-contempt into contempt for the unspeakable cad who disillusioned you. Had you not been a veritable lamb cast to the wolves; had you had any well-founded knowledge, gained through proper study or adequate social experience, of the nature of the man, it is probable you would have seen him for what he was in the very beginning. The fact that you didn't in itself speaks volumes for your essential innocence. So why regard yourself as the world's most scarlet woman? Don't be silly!

Budget Your Income

MAYBE you know how Judy feels. A second ago she was chatting happily to new friends, "If I WAS you, I'd EXCEPT the offer."

Now, as she turns away, she hears Alice say correctly, "Yes, Paul, if I WERE you, I'd ACCEPT"—and she realizes she's been unforgivably careless in her speech. Will Paul get the wrong impression?

Of course he will! To make such blunders as "I feel good" for "I feel well"—or "I don't know where I'm at" for "I don't know where I am"—is just like wearing a sign saying, "I'm poorly educated and don't care."

For it's as simple to keep your speech well groomed as to keep your clothes in order.

First check your talk for common mistakes. Do you say, "I suspicion"—"this here letter"—"he don't say so"—I can do it easy?"

Say these phrases correctly, repeat aloud—"I suspect"—"this letter"—"he doesn't say so"—"I can do it easily."

Do the same thing with another list of your mistakes the next day. Soon charming, correct speech is a habit with you.

With our 40-page booklet "Common Errors in English," it's easy to follow this simple program—and win admiration instead of criticism with your speech.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, "Common Errors in English," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

High School Girl, Winner In Post Recipe Contest

Miss Lucia Pritchett, 812 Underwood street northwest, is putting the finishing touches on the dish which won the first prize in last week's Favorite Recipe contest. The chocolate roll with marshmallow filling is encased in rich fudge icing.

By Jean Green.

CULINARY honors this week were taken by an attractive high school girl, Miss Lucia Pritchett, 17, who attends Roosevelt High School. Her recipe for chocolate marshmallow roll wins the first prize in The Post's weekly recipe contest.

The recipe is simple. The light, tasty chocolate cake is spread with a fluffy marshmallow filling and deftly made into a firm roll and iced with chocolate. It is not only delicious but attractive.

JEAN GREEN.

Miss Pritchett, who lives at 812 Underwood street northwest, proves that the smart young moderns are interested in the fine art of cooking. The collecting of party dishes has been her hobby for several years. Simple dishes that are good are her forte, and I know that invitations to her parties must be highly prized. Some of her specialties are devil's food cake, one-two-three flour cake with caramel icing, and sea foam candy.

Chocolate Marshmallow Roll.

Sift three times: 6 tablespoons of cake flour, ½ teaspoon of baking powder, ¼ teaspoon of salt. Whip 4 egg whites until stiff. Fold in ¾ cup of granulated sugar sifted into four egg yolks beaten until thick. Add vanilla. Then add the sifted flour, baking powder, and salt.

Line a 15 by 10 greased cake pan with paper to ½ inch of the edge. Grease paper, turn in batter. Bake in a hot oven 400 degrees F. for 13 minutes. Quickly cut off crisp edges of cake, turn out on a cloth, sprinkle with powdered sugar. Pull off paper. Spread with marshmallow filling and roll up like a jelly roll. Cool on a rack, then spread with favorite chocolate frosting.

Marshmallow Filling.

Heat 16 marshmallows with 1 tablespoon of milk in a saucepan over low heat, folding over and over until marshmallows are about half melted. Remove from the heat and continue folding until it is smooth and fluffy. Cool. Whip ¼ teaspoon of vanilla with 2 egg whites only until they hold a peak not stiff. Add 3 tablespoons of granulated sugar, beat until stiff and smooth. Spread on cake as directed above.

The recipe winning the second prize comes from the Blue Grass region of Kentucky. It was sent in by Mrs. Henry Hanford, 3706 Military road, Chevy Chase, D. C.

Marshmallow and Fruit Salad.

1 can of pineapple, cut in small pieces
1 pound of marshmallows, quartered
1 large cup of pecans, broken into small pieces

Dressing.

4 egg yolks
½ teaspoon of mustard
Pinch of salt
1 cup of milk
½ pint of whipped cream
Juice of 1 lemon.

Beat the egg yolks, add mustard and salt. Add to the scalded milk. When cold, add the whipped cream and lemon juice. Mix with salad. Serve with lettuce, garnished with whipped cream and cherry.

The third prize recipe was submitted by Mrs. T. W. McHugh, 1216 Terrell avenue, Alexandria, Va. It is simple to prepare and is dainty for tea or for the children's after-school lunch.

Marshmallow Dainties.

Saltines
Marshmallows

On each saltine put a small amount of peanut butter, then place a marshmallow on top of the butter. Put in a moderate oven to brown. Serve at once.

The fourth prize was awarded Mrs. F. J. Whitmire, 401 Aspen street northwest, Takoma Park, D. C. It offers an unusual use for marshmallows. The meringue over the butterscotch pie is light and creamy with the soft fluffy marshmallows.

Butterscotch Pie With Marshmallow Icing.

2 cups of milk
1 cup of brown sugar
2 tablespoons of cornstarch
3 tablespoons of butter
¼ teaspoon of salt
2 eggs
1 teaspoon of vanilla
Pastry shell
1 box of marshmallows

Scald the milk in a double boiler. Mix the sugar and cornstarch. Add to the milk and stir until thick. Cover and cook for 15 minutes. Add the butter, salt, and pour over the egg yolks slightly beaten. Return to the double boiler, stir, and cook one minute. Remove from the fire and cool. When ready to serve add vanilla and pour into a baked pastry shell.

Cut the marshmallows into pieces and put into a warm place until they are soft. Beat the egg whites until stiff. Beat in the marshmallows and spread over the top of the pie. Serve as is or if desired: Bake in the oven until delicately brown.

The fifth prize wax awarded Mrs. Alma Robertson, 49 East Walnut street, Alexandria. Her recipe for Heavenly Hash Supreme is one that I have been searching for since last summer when I first tasted the unusual combination at Hugo's, near North Situate.

Heavenly Hash Supreme.

1 cup of uncooked rice
1 No. 2 can of crushed pineapple
2 cups of sugar
½ pint of whipping cream
16 marshmallows

Cook the rice in salted water for 20 minutes. Drain and put in the colander. Pour cold water over it. Add the drained pineapple, sugar and quartered marshmallows. Stir until thoroughly mixed. Pour into a refrigerator bowl. Add the whipping cream and chill.

Favorite Recipe Contest to Feature Meatless Meals

With the price of meats still soaring, the thrifty housewife turns to meat substitutes to please the family taste and at the same time keep the food budget under control. Our Favorite Recipe Contest will be devoted to this timely theme next week.

There are many foods rich in protein that can be substituted for the meat. Eggs, cheese, poultry and sea food can be served in an infinite variety of ways. Their popularity depends to a large extent on special treatment. Perhaps you have tips on special ways of preparing them for meatless dinners. Recipes of this type may win one of the cash prizes awarded in the contest.

The prize for the winning recipe in this contest, will be $3, the second prize $2, and the other three $1 each.

Squash Novelty.

Cut peeled squash into half-inch pieces and brown two cupsful in three tablespoonsful of bacon fat for ten minutes. (Other fat may also be used.) Add one tablespoonful of minced parsley, one tablespoonful of minced onion and a little salt and paprika for seasoning.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE LADY who lives cata-corner across the street from us is an artist at cooking. Especially is she proud of her shining rows of conserves and jellies, and so she's recently fixed over her pantry to do them justice.

"I don't see why a pantry shouldn't be worth showing off. After all it's a lot more interesting than a linen closet, and we go to all sorts of fuss and feathers to floss it up."

There's something to that idea. And she has carried it out delightfully. First, she had her old everyday shelves torn out and replaced on the long side of the pantry with new shelves built brick wise, as the Chinese build shelves to make them more interesting. The short wall of the pantry she had filled with drawers. (All this would have been expensive carpentry work if she hadn't gotten hold of a manual-training neighbor boy to do the work.) She painted the walls of the pantry in white and the shelves and drawers in mandarin red.

For the floor she had a black marbilized linoleum put in and on the black wall alongside of the door she hung a framed chart outlining her basic canning recipes—some old standbys handed down from her mother, others copied from here and there and still others originated by her own experiments. On the inside of the door she lettered in black a table of standard weights and measures along with a chart of the vitamins. No wonder she's proud to throw open her pantry door whenever she has an interested visitor!

Here's a tip we carried away—soup jelly . . . maybe you've been making it all your life, but we hadn't. She gets a large pot of soup bone (preferably the bone just below the knee because it has the best marrow) and boils it in her big 18-quart kettle till it's at the stage it will jell. Then she seals it in jelly glasses and has fresh soup stock on the spur of th minute. Needless to sa she has loads of good soup recipes all as different as anything and each good for a whole meal in itself.

The 800 pupils in Arlington School at Toledo, Ohio, didn't have much interest in their lessons yesterday. Everywhere they were talking about gun-play. Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Copyright, 1937, for The Washington Post.

The wives of five of the most important foreign ambassadors in Washington—British, Spanish, French, Belgian and Italian—were American girls, only a decade or so ago. Now a hasty check reveals only one.

* * * *

Just another sign of intense nationalism in foreign parts . . . Maybe this had something to do with the State Department's orders against foreign marriages by young American diplomats—or elderly ones, for that matter . . . If a foreign diplomat is ambitious to become ambassador to this country, it doesn't hurt him, of course, to be married to a wealthy and distinguished American family . . . Maybe we could put these international marriages on a reciprocal quota basis.

* * * *

Washington's smart crowd is taking steam baths, calisthenics or just deep breaths in preparation for the social season, which begins next month . . . At the height of the season it's not rare for a sprightly lady to take in a morning musicale, funeral, luncheon, cocktail party, dinner, reception and midnight supperdance all in one day.

After examining the Washington aspects of the two great political parties through the same magnifying glass I once used in botany and zoology classes, it appears that the difference between the Democratic and Republican Parties is comparable to the difference between General Motors and Chrysler, or M. G. M. and Warner Brothers, or the National and American Leagues, or two different cassowaries at the zoo—a difference in plumage, chiefly . . . I mean the parties, not their adherents, who differ quite perceptibly.

* * * *

Potomac tripe: The environs of the Capital abound in Indian names—of which Chincoteague and Accotink are two of the most musical . . . Another of my pets in the Patent Office morgue of dead inventions is the plate-glass tombstone—with a space in the lower section for the ash urn, and a compartment above for wreaths and flowers, protected from blizzards and plainly visible to the onlooker.

* * * *

As my old grandmother used to say, the best argument with a pig is a poke in the snout . . . The best way to pacify Japan might be a few bombs over Tokyo . . . Maybe some of those Russian fliers could detour on their way over the Pole.

* * * *

In the last two years or so nine Representatives have resigned—only two of them to become Senators . . . The reserve and hauteur of the foreign dimplomats melts a little under American brashness; occasionally you may hear a French or British diplomat discussing his indigestion with charming candor.

* * * *

Capital caprices: Alice Longworth claims she reads the Bible almost everyday . . . Can this be another of her madcap pranks? . . . Some of the worldlier Representatives suggest that the oratory in the House is more endurable after three mint juleps . . . If I were a Senator I suppose I'd like to have a son as one my secretaries, to handle more confidential matters; it's only human . . . And he'd probably blackmail me, too!

In Secretary Morgenthau's anteroom hang impressive oils of Secretaries of the Treasury Houston, McAdoo, Wooden, Mills and Glass . . . But in his own office he communes with oils of Salmon P. Chase and Albert Gallatin, of classic vintage . . . Which one will the ultimate oil of Mellon displace?

He is one of the slenderest of the Senators, and a poll once crowned him as the Senator with the most sex appeal . . . He is a great warrior, and has a DSC, but loves to lounge in a silken bathrobe . . . Gossips credit him with painting several great beauties in the nude, a feat he tut-tuts . . . A fine horseman, he is currently more famed as a writer of riders.

* * * *

The venom with which critics attack President Roosevelt reminds me of the malicious assaults on President Jefferson around the year 1805, though I was a mere lad in those days . . . A compilation of the lies told about Jefferson would make amusing reading nowadays . . . I predict that the grandchildren of some of Mr. Roosevelt's most unbridled critics will have his picture hanging in their dens.

Court Annuls Montgomery Zoning Law

In one of the most far-reaching legal actions ever taken in Montgomery County, Judge Charles W. Woodward, of the Montgomery-Frederick Circuit Court, yesterday signed an injunction restraining the board of county commissioners and others from enforcing the zoning ordinance in the Washington-Maryland Metropolitan District.

The injunction was granted in favor of Peter Fritz, proprietor of the Log Cabin Inn near Wheaton inside the metropolitan area of the county and located on property zoned residential under county ordinances adopted by the commissioners in conformity with the act creating the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Under the injunction the commissioners and Nicholas Griffith, who swore out a warrant August 13, 1937, against Fritz, are restrained from prosecuting Fritz for violation of the zoning ordinance under the warrant and also are restrained from interfering with Fritz in the operation of a lawful business on his property.

Ordinances Nullified.

Judge Woodward in issuing the injunction gave the commissioners the right to move for rescinding of the order or dissolution of the injunction at any time after filing an answer to the bill and giving five days' notice to Fritz.

The effect of the injunction, if it is allowed to stand, will be to nullify all zoning ordinances in the populous suburban communities of Montgomery and Prince Georges counties and leave that section which includes dozens of municipalities and unincorporated towns without any legal safeguard whatsoever against encroachment of business establishments in residential areas, or the operation of all types of commercial and industrial enterprises wherever the owners may see fit to enter into business.

The injunction was granted by Judge Woodward after Peter Fritz filed a bill in equity through his attorneys, James H. Pugh, States Attorney for Montgomery County, Miss Vivian V. Simpson and Joseph B. Simpson, making the following five prayers:

That the county commissioners and Nicholas Griffith, who swore out the warrant be restrained from prosecuting Fritz under a warrant issued August 13, 1937, charging him with operating a business establishment in a restricted residential zone.

Chapter 448 of the acts of 1927 of the Maryland General Assembly and amendments creating the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission be held unconstitutional and null and void.

Commission's Acts Hit.

That all ordinances passed by the board of county commissioners as a district council as provided under Chapter 448 be held unconstitutional.

That ordinances regulating Fritz' property as to use be held unconstitutional.

In his bill Fritz contended that he has a large investment in the Log Cabin Inn near Wheaton, where he is engaged in the business of serving meals; that the property comes within the metropolitan area which is an area arbitrarily designated and bears no relation to the health, welfare and morals, and that the county commissioners do not actually exercise their authority as a district council, but instead allow the park and planning commission to use their discretion in determining zoning in the area.

Fritz further declared that the metropolitan area includes 32 square miles, in which part of the land is urban and the rest agricultural and timber land. For this reason he holds it is not a fit subject for regulations for the various areas are not similar. He declared that a law applying the same regulations to such towns as Chevy Chase and Takoma Park as apply to his own land in the rural section is not proper.

Fritz has operated his establishment for the past several years and the present controversy is the outgrowth of complaints made by his neighbors that he was operating a business on land zoned residential.

The park and planning commission, the county commissioners, and the liquor control board all have denied Fritz the right to operate his business and when he refused to close his doors a warrant charging violation of the zoning ordinance was issued last month.

Citizen Group Joins in Move For D. C. Vote

Burroughs Members Will Affiliate With Suffrage Association.

The Burroughs Citizens Association voted last night to affiliate with the recently organized District Suffrage Association, in their first fall meeting held at the John Burroughs School.

Among those who sponsored the action were Wilbur Finch, now president of the Suffrage Association; J. P. Armstrong and R. M. Furniss, who three years ago drew up the "Burroughs plan" for local suffrage. Their plan included a city government headed by a council, with a city manager as chief executive.

Furniss said last night he was confident their affiliation with the Suffrage Association would be supported by the remainder of the citizens group, about 200 of whom were not present.

Liquor License Fought

Application for a license to sell spirituous liquors, made by Jewler's store, Euclid and Georgia avenues, was subject of protest by the Federation of Civic Associations last night at a meeting in the District Building. A letter was directed to be sent to the Board of Education asking its disapproval of the application because of the immediate vicinity of Miner Teachers College and the Banneker Recreation Center.

A committee of five was appointed, on request of Woolsey W. Hall, federation president, to study proposals for reorganization of the District of Columbia government, and similar governmental matters. Named on the committee were James D. Pair, George W. Beasley, Maj. H. D. Queen, George H. Ganaway and Mrs. Velma Williams.

The federation, by resolution, expressed gratitude to the Board of Education, in behalf of the colored community, "for its contribution to the general welfare by its unfavorable decision with reference to a proposal to require all night school teachers to have a college degree."

Recreational facilities in the District of Columbia were made the subject of a special report to be presented at the October meeting.

Anacostia Citizens Delay Officer Vote

Members of the Anacostia Citizens Association, in a monthly meeting last night, voted to postpone the election of officers and appointed a committee to submit names of qualified candidates.

Terms of officers expired last night, but H. E. Simensen, president, and William J. Tucker, secretary, only officers present at the meeting, refused reappointment, and members were unable to solicit new officers.

The nominating committee appointed is composed of Mrs. Phyllis Plemmons, second vice president, whose term also expired last night; Tucker and Mrs. Frank Tew.

Capital Big Apple Turns Sour In Dancing Program Mix-up

Something went wrong with that dancing-in-the-street program last night. What might have been a joyous Big Apple festival along historic Pennsylvania avenue got mired in some crossed signals, and the result was that a lot of partners didn't get swung.

It wasn't the fault of the prospective dancers; they were out in large numbers in front of the District Building, their feet itching to shuffle on the asphalt. It wasn't the fault of the police, either. They had roped off the street there, just as requested.

Neither was it the fault of the weather man. It was a perfect night, as promised, with a moon, stars and romance in the balmy air.

Everything but Music.

All that was needed was music, but there was no music—not even so much as a hurdy-gurdy. The bandstand had been set up in the little grass-covered triangle in front of the District Building, and the dancers were gathered around it, sweatered and eager, waiting for the musicians to arrive. They waited one hour, two hours, three—and then they gave up and went home.

Farther down, at Seventh street and Pennsylvania avenue, there was a situation that was the reverse. Here there was a band, but no dancers. It was the Boys Club Band, whose repertoire consists entirely of military marches.

"How're you going to dance to Sousa?" asked one would-be dancer, moving away.

Musicians Tire and Quit.

However, it didn't last very long. No chairs had been provided for the musicians and, becoming tired, they decided to pack their instruments and leave.

One part of the program did stand up. Along about 9 p. m. Mary Louise Colbert, queen of the President's Cup Regatta, came down the Avenue, standing up and looking very lovely in an automobile surrounded by Sea Scouts carrying red flares.

Earlier in the day, a flotilla of racing boats, straffing each other with spray, roared over the Potomac vying gamely for honors in the regatta.

Business Tax Is Taken Off Illicit Trades

Bootleggers and Gaming Houses Are Barred From Taxation.

An amendment to the District business privilege tax regulations, the effect of which may deprive the city of some revenue, was adopted by the Commissioners yesterday.

The amendment is designed to prevent any licensee under the act from using his permit as an authorization to violate other laws or zoning regulations. However, its effect is to bar any bootleggers, gambling houses, or other illegal establishments from paying the gross receipts tax demanded of legitimate business.

Corporation Counsel Elwood R. Seal, in recommending the amendment, explained:

"It has come to my attention that there has been, and no doubt will be, claims made by persons that the granting of the license under the new business-privilege tax would authorize them to engage in business, no matter whether such business is prohibited under the law generally, or whether it would be permitted in certain locations by the zoning law or the liquor law."

The regulation stipulates that the license does not give the holder the authority to violate any other laws or regulations in the operation of his business.

Property Revenue Tax

A novel plan for taxing realty property owners in proportion to their returns from investments was suggested yesterday by Chairman Palmisano of the House District Committee, and immediately was denounced by District tax experts as "unworkable" and sure to curtail the city's revenue.

Palmisano, seeking a tax plan that would keep down rents, suggested a tax rate of $1 on every $100 return. He admitted that the levy could not be applied to home owners or vacant land.

"I have never heard of a plan like that anywhere in the country," Tax Assessor Fred D. Allen said. "It just wouldn't work."

Road Plan Backed By Keystone Club

The Keystone Automobile Club yesterday submitted the first report to Col. Dan I. Sultan, Engineer Commissioner, on the five-year highway development program drafted by Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways. A dozen or more civic agencies had been asked for opinions.

George E. Keneipp, Keystone manager, said the board had indorsed the program in principle provided the program does not exceed anticipated revenue from the highway fund.

James Roosevelt Identifies Jewelry

In a three minute appearance before the District grand jury, James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, yesterday identified articles of jewelry stolen from his Georgetown home several weeks ago when, in his absence, two colored youths pillaged it.

James Dyson, 17, and Conrad F. Carter, 20, are alleged to have broken into the Roosevelt home, taking several small articles such as cuff links and shirt studs.

Defalcations Charged To Prospective G-Men

New York, Sept. 24 (AP).—Two young lawyers who applied for jobs as G-men in Washington when they were wanted in New York on complaints that they defaulted with $50,000 in clients' funds were held in jail without bail here today.

Judge Algernon L. Nova, before whom the two—Raymond Davis, 30, and Jacob Sielberman, 31—were arraigned yesterday, said he would not set bail until he had received a report from District Attorney William F. X. Geoghan "showing the total amounts of the defalcations with which these defendants may be charged."

Maj. Ralph Graves, assistant chief in the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, was elected president of the District department, American Federation of Government Employes, succeeding James G. Yaden at the department's annual election of officers last night.

Eight vice presidents were elected, as follows: LaRue E. Tanner, Charles B. Buck, Charles F. Sharkey, Mrs. Helen Voss, E. Glenn Hunter, Mrs. Mary Beiber, Mrs. M. Regina Doyle, and Miss Vinnie Harrington. James B. Baugh, jr., was re-elected treasurer for a third term. Leon Maxson, opposing Charles G. Towner, Herbert Strople, and Mrs. Irene Bradley were named on the audit committee. Harry F. Rader became sergeant at arms.

Graves pledged himself to work toward giving Government employes a career service. "Our first consideration," he said, "is our jobs and the means to rise on merit."

Graves, who has been an active member of the District department, was born in Lynn, Mass., and was graduated as a mechanical engineer from Cornell University in 1907. He spent several years in Europe in the study of cathedrals. He was an efficiency supervisor in the Chicago shops of the Chicago & Northwestern Railroad; was a captain in the chief of ordnance office, War Department, 1917; was promoted to the rank of major, and holds that rank now in the Reserves.

Subsequently, he engaged in private enterprise and served for two years with the Railroad Administration as an engineer of equipment before assuming his present position with the Treasury.

The Rev. James H. De Pue, 70, former pastor of Arlington Presbyterian Church, died yesterday at Georgetown University Hospital following a brief illness.

The Rev. Mr. De Pue headed Arlington Presbyterian Church for six years until 1923. In recent years he had preached in many of the churches of the District, and had been active in tutoring work. His home was at 1349 Kenyon street northwest.

A native of Belvidere, N. J., the Rev. Mr. De Pue graduated from Princeton University, and later studied for the ministry in Pittsburgh. He was active in church work in Pittsburgh for several years before coming to Washington in 1917.

Recodified Air Laws Published In U. S. Register

The first installment of the recodification of air laws was published yesterday in the Federal Register, preliminary to an effective date of November 1.

The result of more than a year's work under direction of Fred D. Fagg, jr., director of the Bureau of Air Commerce, and Prof. John H. Wigmore, dean of the School of Law at Northwestern University, the recodification was intended to eliminate duplications, ambiguous phrases and minor errors in the body of civil air regulations.

A number of changes have been made, however, especially in the airline regulations, and the airworthiness requirements. These changes have been based on conferences between Federal officials and representatives of the aviation industry during the past year.

In the first group of chapters selected for publication the subjects of aircraft registration certificates, aircraft certificates, aircraft identification markers, aircraft title transfers, airplane airworthiness, aircraft propeller airworthiness, aircraft engine airworthiness, aircraft equipment airworthiness and repair and alteration of circraft are covered.

Mrs. Nolan Believed China War Refugee

L. C. Nolan, economist in the Agriculture Department, last night felt reasonably sure that his wife, missing in the China war zone for several weeks, is safe aboard a steamer headed for the West Coast.

Nolan, who lives at 1309 Sixteenth street, was awaiting a reply from a cable sent to the captain of the Empress of Russia, after being told by the State Department that his wife, Evelyn Nolan, was believed to be aboard. The ship is scheduled to land in Vancouver October 4.

Blue Plate Special, or Potpourri.

By Shirley Povich.

To Whom It May Concern: The minimum pay of Redskin players is $125 per game . . . but the envelope of Slingin' Sammy Baugh contains $450 every Friday . . . . Cliff Battles is the No. 2 man on George P. Marshall's football payroll . . . when Babe Ruth was drawing his $80,000 per annum salary from the Yankees in 1928, he was being paid at the rate of $519 per game — for 154 games . . . which ain't hay . . . Hugo Bezdek, of the Cleveland Rams, is the only coach in the Pro league who has a reputation as a college coach . . . Owners of the Pro clubs look down their noses at college coaches after several disastrous experiences with that type.

POVICH.

The Boston Red Sox's search for a right-handed hitting outfielder who can take advantage of that short leftfield fence at Fenway Park is keeping the telephone wires hot between the Hub and St. Louis . . . Joe Vosmik, of the Browns, is the guy the Red Sox want . . . if the Red Sox finish in the first division, it will be worth $400 to each man on the club . . . if they finish third, each man's share of the world series spoils will be nearer $800 . . . Carl Reynolds, who will share in whatever the Cubs get out of the world series, is among the most comfortably fixed ball players . . . three years ago, under the Roosevelt AAA program, Reynolds received a check for $15,000 from the Government for not planting wheat on his huge Texas farm.

In Dutch in Rhode Island for calling the governor a "..... liar" in his Providence newspaper, Walter O'Hara is now eyeing the Suffolk Downs track in Boston with an idea of buying control . . . but the tip is out that O'Hara will win his fight to reopen his Narragansett track on October 17. . . . O'Hara's financial angel is Annenberg, owner of the Nation-Wide racing news service . . . a local labor publication states unequivocally that: "The Louis-Farr fight was a fake, staged for the purpose of building up Farr for Promoter Mike Jacobs and that the sports editors, who are either very stupid or very crooked, sold out their readers." . . . fearless journalism, huh?

The home run that Ben Chapman hit over the left-field wall at Boston the other day was a bittersweet affair . . . if there is one team that Chapman hates above all others, it is the New York Yankees . . . yet it was his homer, beating Detroit, that clinched the pennant for the Yankees, who needed one more Detroit defeat to make the flag mathematically certain . . . Chapman, one of the toughest hombres in the league, has never touched tobacco or spirits . . . which recalls that two of baseball's model boys, Walter Johnson and Monte Weaver, this year have taken to the weed.

* * * *

The first time Sammy Baugh fumbles a punt or otherwise errs to lose a game for the Redskins, the gag writers won't miss "Baugh, Baugh, Black Sheep!" Washington fans who saw Cliff Battles run wild against Georgetown in '30, '31 and '32 knew him then as "Gyp" Battles . . . he acquired the name in college because, on the football field, he was just a plain gyp, looking one way and running the other, sucking in the ends and otherwise deceiving anybody who was set for a tackle . . . Battles explodes the theory that the chief requirements for pro football are a weak mind and a strong back . . . he's an intellectual who can expound scholarly on most any topic.

Cardinals Trounce Redskins, 21 to 14

By Shirley Povich.

Gaynell Tinsley speared three passes last night at Griffith Stadium, carried them all over the goal line for touchdowns, and lifted the Chicago Cardinals to a 21-14 victory over the Redskins before 22,367 fans.

Tinsley's final feat of the night was to catch a pass from Grosvenor under the goal posts with six minutes to play and break a 14-14 tie.

First Quarter.

The white-panted Cardinals received Riley Smith's kick-off and punted after two running plays picked up only 4 yards deep in their own territory. Despite a 7-yard gain on a pass from Baugh to Milner, the Redskins failed to make a first down in three plays from scrimmage and Baugh kicked 55 yards over the goal line for a touchback.

A quick kick sent the Redskins back into their own territory and, after a Baugh pass to Malone missed fire, Baugh set the Cardinals back on their heels with a quick kick. Pangle smashed center for 3 yards and Russell, fading back, whipped a pass to Tinsley over the center of the line and Tinsley romped 64 yards down the field to a touchdown. It was a beautiful dash by Tinsley, who cut for the sidelines and outsprinted Riley Smith in the race to the goal. Smith making a last desperate dive in vain on the Redskins' 5-yard line. Baker converted the goal with a place kick.

Sammy Baugh ran the Redskins' kickoff back 20 yards and on the next play threw a pass to Don Irwin for a nine-yard gain. Irwin made it first down through the left side of the Bears' line and Baugh whipped a low pass to Wayne Milner who was tackled on the Cardinals' 35 after a 20-yard gain. Baugh faked a pass and, on a cut-back play, smashed through right guard for nine yards before Parker brought him down. Baugh bulled his way through center for two yards and a first down on the Cardinals' 23. Baugh flipped a long pass that was caught by Malone on the Cardinals' one-yard line and one stride carried Malone across the goal for a touchdown. Riley Smith place-kicked the extra point.

Score: Redskins, 7; Cardinals, 7.

Grosvenor carried Smith's kick-off back 30 yards to the Cardinals' 40 and was nearly loose when Pinckert made the tackle. Edwards broke through the Cardinals' line and recovered a fumble for the Redskins on the Cardinals' 35. The ball was dropped by Grosvenor on a short-side play. Baugh failed to find a receiver on a long pass and then lost six yards on another passing attempt when he was rushed by Carter. Baugh punted 55 yards to a touchback.

Prangle took a pass behind the line from Russell and made 10 yards at left end. Tipton on a fake reverse, picked up 5 yards before Pinckert mauled him. Grosvenor smashed through the center of the line and was loose until Baugh brought him down after a 21-yard gain to the Redskins' 44. Grosvenor threw a pass to Tinsley into the flat zone and Tinsley raced 40 yards down the sideline for a touchdown. Baker place-kicked for the extra point.

Score—Cardinals, 14; Redskins, 7.

Cliff Battles went into the Redskins' backfield, replacing Baugh. Both Battles' entrance and Baugh's departure drew thunderous cheers. Baker's poor kick-off was received by Malone who was dropped without gain on the Redskins' 30 as the first quarter ended.

Score—Cardinals, 14; Redskins, 7.

Second Quarter.

Battles banged the center of the line for 5 yards before Cuppoletti dropped him. Battles fired a pass over the center of the line to Malone for a 5-yard gain and a first down on the Redskins' 41. Battles picked up 5 more at center and then threw a pass wide of Irwin. Smith's kick on fourth down was partly blocked and downed by Millner on the Cardinals' 25. Reed's magnificent kick

Old Line Foe Of St. John's Here Today

Maryland's 1937 football team will be unveiled this afternoon in a public ceremony at College Park with the assistance of a visiting eleven from St. John's of Annapolis. The kick-off is scheduled for 2:30 o'clock.

In accordance with an old established custom the Terrapins are expected to jostle the Johnnies for at least three touchdowns and a fairly convincing decision. They have the necessary manpower, even with Bill Guckeyson missing, while St. John's was badly riddled by graduation.

St. John's dropped a 20-0 game to Maryland last season and then went undefeated over the remainder of the campaign. Today, however, Coach "Dutch" Valentine has only Johnny Lambros and Len DeLisio from that fine team to build around. His material is plentiful, but plenty green in the bargain, and the game figures to be nothing more than a brisk workout for the host club.

Frank Dobson has a big and fairly fast line at Maryland to pave the way for a medium-sized backfield featuring "Jumbo Jim" Meade in the triple-threat role. Meade, however, will not be the whole show, for Charley Weidinger, an ace passer, will give the visitors something to think about.

Navy Opens Grid Season With W. M.

Annapolis, Md., Sept. 24.—The Navy opens its football season here tomorrow against William and Mary, usually its initial opponent for the last dozen years. Both teams had brief workouts here this afternoon, the visitors in Thompson Stadium and the local squad in the regular practice field.

Special interest attaches to the game as the first for a Navy team coached by Lieut. Hank Hardwick, who has succeeded his classmate, Lieut. Tom Hamilton. Hardwick has changed the style of football in many particulars, notably in having his plays issue from the single-wing back formation instead of the short kick form usually used last year.

Hardwick stated that he would not use Irwin Fike, veteran left end, though he could play if necessary. Lucien Powell, first baseman of the nine, will be in his place, with Cy Emrich on the other end. Two players, Alan McFarland, back, and Al Bergner, left tackle, have broken into the first string announced early in the season by Hardwick.

McFarland, placed in the backfield primarily as a punter, has developed as an excellent ball carrier and will help Bill Ingram out in this line. Hardwick stated that each had been doing good work in practice.

It is the general opinion that, owing to the early selection of a first-string line-up and the concentration of the coaches on that group, the Navy team is advanced more than usual for Navy teams at this period, and that some fast scoring is likely. However, Hardwick expects to try to put as many players as possible in.

Substitutions will be individually, and there is no alternate team that could take the field as a whole. Another of Hardwick's changes has been in the selection of one varsity team only.

Ohio State Groomed For Texas Christian

New York, Sept. 24.—College football blasts its way into the national sports picture tomorrow, taking up the headline slack in the wake of a volley of left jabs on the pugilistic front and with the edge currently off major league baseball's pennant fights. There has already been some scattering gridiron skirmishing but this week's firing, heaviest in the Middle and Far West, marks the actual start of the big drive for glory, gate receipts, and post-season invitations to the featured New Year's "Bowl" festivities.

Most of the ranking collegiate football powers, headed from all accounts by Minnesota's mighty Gophers and Pittsburgh's Rose Bowl champions, will swing into action for the first time.

The Middle West furnishes the chief intersectional test and the biggest drawing card, with Texas Christian challenging Ohio State at Columbus before an expected turnout of 75,000 fans, but the Pacific Coast has a three-star program calculated to lure 135,000 spectators through the turnstiles.

A crowd of 60,000 is predicted for the California-St. Mary's game, with 40,000 due to see Stanford play Santa Clara, the Sugar Bowl winner, and 35,000 anticipated for the intersectional match between the University of Iowa and Washington's huskies, 1936 Pacific Coast Conference champions, at Seattle.

Big Ten Teams Show.

Seven of the Big Ten conference squads will be put on view but only Ohio State and Iowa appear to be in danger of defeat. Ohio State gets the call over Texas Christian in what should prove one of the day's toughest battles. The Texans no longer have their ace pass slinger, Sammy Baugh, but they possess a stalwart line and the power to give the Buckeyes all they can handle. Iowa, making its debut under the new coaching regime of Irl Tubbs, may get nothing more than the experience and a train ride. Washington figures to beat the Hawkeyes handily.

Such is the gridiron fever in the region of the twin cities that 52,000 followers of the Golden Gophers are expected to see them enjoy a workout at the expense of North Dakota State. Minnesota, No. 1 team of the Nation last year, appears to have 'em "three deep" again, despite the loss of such stars as all-America Ed Widseth at tackle.

Illinois, starting its twenty-fifth season under Bob Zuppke, has no setup in Ohio University but figures to get off on the right foot. Wisconsin and Indiana have nothing especially to fear from South Dakota State or Centre, respectively. Purdue, led by the versatile Cecil Isbell, may have trouble with Butler. The champion Northwesterns, as well as Chicago and Michigan, start competition next week.

California Choice.

There will be no delay getting an early line on Pacific Coast Conference prospects. California, with clearly defined title aspirations, is the choice over St. Mary's. The Gaels had trouble untracking themselves last season and remain a doubtful entry until proved otherwise. Santa Clara was two touchdowns better than Stanford last year. The Bronchos are favored to repeat, but it should be closer. U. C. L. A. is the choice over Oregon in a conference tilt.

Pittsburgh, with most of its 1936 stars available, figures to run roughshod over Ohio Wesleyan with a warning show of power. The Panthers play a terrific ten-game schedule this year, but they have

New Jersey Banker Scores Double Win

By Dan Craig.

Under sunny skies, America's outboard stars from East and West met on the historic Potomac yesterday in a brilliant contest of nerve and skill that saw Douglas Fonda, of Orange, N. J., and pretty Mrs. Mary Daller, of Chester, Pa., score spectacular victories to headline the first power events of the President's Cup Regatta.

Thrills and spills were the order of the day for 10,000 who lined the flag-bedecked Hains Point seawall and perched atop half a hundred yachts that flanked the course.

Driving Lolly Pop, her tiny midgetclass outboard, Mrs. Daller staged a thriller in the free-for-all handicap feature to score over Dick Neal, veteran Kansas City, Mo., professional, who roared over the lines less than 2 seconds later.

Females Star.

Earlier in the day the youthful feminine speedster forced four male drivers to take back seats when she piloted her fragile craft down the home stretch at better than 32 m. p. h. to take top honors in the midget class.

Douglas Fonda, 42-year-old industrial banker, who for the last two years has spent his week-ends on the water relaxing, while rolling up the greatest number of points in the history of the outboard racing game, paced the field in classes A and C.

Piloting Miss Riccochet, Fonda, made a runaway of the Class A amateur event, first start of the day, and later was tied up with Bob Watkins, of Hoquiam, Wash., each holding 700 points when the noise subsided in the Class C division.

Tragedy Averted.

Near tragedy was averted late in the afternoon when Arthur Wullschleger, of Larchmont, N. Y., jockeying for the Class F Open start, roared out from behind the Coast Guard Cutter Apache at better than 45 miles an hour, just as an unidentified driver shot under her bows. Each driver swerved his flying craft in a burst of spray and dodged a collision that would have brought them together at a combined speed of more than 80 miles an hour.

It was Wullschleger's unlucky day, for the Larchmont driver was tossed from his craft as it struck a wash, and shot into the air in a "C" race early in the afternoon.

In the Free-for-All Handicap, Victor A. Scott, Class C amateur from Forest Hills, N. Y., struck rough water while rounding the lower turn at high speed in the first lap and capsized. Coast Guard picket boats and police launches converged on the sinking boat, and Scott was pulled out of the river unhurt.

Guttmann Hits 52.631.

In the first heat of the Class F Open division, Ken MacKenzie, of New Haven, Conn., registered 51.834 to win, but in the second heat Bob Guttmann, of Manitowoc, Wis., drove his long-nosed W-4, that looked more like a gondola than a racing craft, roaring over the 5-mile course at 52.631 miles per hour to take the second heat with the highest speed of the day.

The winners were Thom Cooper, of Kansas City, Mo., who won in the Class A professional, scoring over Fred Jacoby, of North Bergen, N. J., the ranking professional driver, and C. Milford Scull, of Glenheim, N. J., with straight victories in both heats.

Jim Mullen, of Richmond, Va., rolled up a total of 700 points to win the Class B amateur, while Fred Jacoby and Bob Meyer, of Chicago, were tied in the Class B professional with 625 points each.

Fonda and Bob Watkins were tied in the Class C amateur, and Dick Neal, of Kansas City, cleaned up in the professional ranks, amassing 800 points to Harrison's 525. More than 100,000 persons are expected to jam Hains Point today and Sunday to see the big inboard boats take to the course off Hains Point in the President's Cup race, feature of the regatta, the American speedboat championships, the 225-cubic inch hydroplane free-for-all, the All-American Sweepstakes, and the mile trials.

Six of America's fastest Gold Cup racers led by the favorite, Herbert Mendelson's Notre Dame from Detroit, are set to repel the challenge of Count Theo Rossi's two 90-mile-an-hour invaders, Alagi and Arademe.

Manor Star To Oppose Mrs. Amick

Miss Brown Wins, 6 and 5; Mrs. Amick Ousts Mrs. A. W. Tucker.

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Rising to the occasion with one of the finest rounds of golf in her career, Manor Club's blond and bashful young star, Miss Marion Brown, yesterday defeated Mrs. Betty Meckley, 6 and 5, and entered the finals of The Washington Post's fifth annual match play tournament at Columbia, where she will meet Mrs. E. M. Amick at 9:30 this morning.

Playing the first nine in 37 strokes, including a 6 on a par 4 hole, the winner took advantage of two handicap strokes to gain a win and halve and led 5 up at the turn, and she closed the match four holes later with a tee shot on the short thirteenth that nearly hit the hole.

Mrs. Amick, a 14-handicap player from the host club, took advantage of the inconsistent play of last year's finalist, Mrs. A. W. Tucker, Beaver Dam, and closed the match on the fifteenth hole by a 4 and 3 margin, taking advantage of a handicap stroke on the fifth hole, but mainly because she played one of her finest rounds of golf thus far in the week-long tourney.

A pair of birdie putts on the third and fourth holes, a fine recovery shot on the eighth and an all-round good game by the Manor club champion proved to be the downfall of Mrs. Meckley, who played the front nine in 42 strokes, including two bad holes, the seventh and ninth.

After halving 1 and 2 in 5-4, Miss Brown ran down a 20-foot putt for a birdie on the third hole to go 1 up and followed with a 12-footer for a deuce on 4 to assume a 2-up lead she never relinquished.

They halved the fifth in par 5s, but Marion's stroke aided her in winning the hole. A flubbed approach and strong chip cost a 6 to the eventual winner on the next hole but it was good for a halve as she used the second of her three handicap strokes. Mrs. Meckley was down in 5.

A par 4 on the seventh increased Miss Brown's lead to 4 up as Mrs. Meckley trapped her second and she held the lead through the short eighth as Mrs. Meckley placed her tee shot within 6 feet of the pin but missed the putt as her opponent, wide of the green from the tee, put her approach close and rammed home the putt for a 3 and leaving pai for a 36 on the ninth.

Mrs. Meckley three-putted the ninth and lost to a 5. They halved the tenth in 5s, Mrs. Meckley negotiating a partial stymie, but she missed a 10-inch putt on the eleventh and was 6 down and 7 to play.

Gaining her third handicap stroke on the twelfth hole, Miss Brown used it for a halve, taking 6 to her opponent's 5, and closed the match on the next hole after her spoon shot nearly holed out, hitting within inches of the pin. They halved in 3s.

The Mrs. Tucker-Mrs. Amick battle was even as they halved the first hole but Mrs. Tucker gained a short lead by winning the second. It was two up as she won the fourth but Mrs. Amick won the next three in a row, lost the eighth and halved nine to lead one up at the turn.

After halving the tenth hole the eventual winner lost little time in piling up a winning margin, winning 11 and 12, aided by good putting, halving 13 and winning and halving the next two holes to end the match, 4 and 3.

Mrs. Amick, Times Cup winner last year, will receive nine strokes from the Manor youngster in the match starting at 9:30 this morning for the title relinquished by Miss Gloria Rodgers, of Kenwood.

Miss Brown, aiming for the biggest title in her golfing lears, will have to play the same near-par brand of golf she exhibited yesterday against Mrs. Meckley if she wins over the steady play of the host club star, who has brushed aside four opponents with her relentless straight-down-the-middle golf.

In the consolation flights Mrs. Leo Walper, 2 and 1 victory over Mrs. Walter Stokes, will meet Mrs. C. E. Purdy, 1 up winner over Mrs. L. G. Pray, in the finals, at 9:25.

Outboard Racers Risk Necks in President's Cup Heat

Redskins Bow To Cardinals By 21-14 Score

Battles threw a diagonal pass to Irwin, who galloped 17 yards before Reed brought him down on the Cardinals' 48. In a sweep around left end Battles fended off three tacklers and picked up nine yards before Parker nailed him. Cuppoletti threw Battles for a 5-yard loss at left end. Battles' punt was partially blocked and recovered by the Cardinals on their own 24.

After three rushes netted only 5 yards, Grosvenor punted to Battles who fumbled on his own 30, Morrow recovering for the Cardinals. Three smashes at the line by Grosvenor and Pangle netted 8 yards. Edwards stopped Pangle for no gain and the Redskins took the ball. Baugh replaced Irwin for the Redskins. Baugh flipped a pass to Battles for a 23-yard gain. Baugh misses on successive passing attempts to Battles, Millner and Smith and then out of bounds on the Cardinals' 23. Grosvenor punted to Baugh on the Redskins 15 as the half ended.

Score—Cardinals, 14; Redskins, 7.

Third Quarter.

Both Baugh and Battles were in the Redskins' backfield as the teams resumed. Battles was dropped on his own 20 after taking the kickoff. Forced to punt, Baugh booted over Grosvenor's head, outside, on the Cardinals' 30.

The Cardinals punted to Baugh on his own 20. Baugh flipped a pass to Charley Malone for a 22-yard gain. Battles drifted around left end for 12 yards and first down on the Cardinals' 46. The Redskins' attack bogged when Baugh was rushed on two passes and Battles was tackled for no gain. Baugh punted to Grosvenor, who returned the ball to his own 15.

Grosvenor punted to Baugh, who fought his way back 18 yards to the Cardinals' 34. Faking a reverse play, Baugh passed to Millner over the line for a 16-yard gain to the Cardinals' 18. Battles slammed through center for 7 yards. Baugh whipped a pass to Battles far to the side and Battles carried it over for a touchdown after being spilled by Grosvenor on the 2-yard line. Battles crawled across the goal. With Baugh holding the ball, Riley Smith converted the goal by place kick.

Score—Cardinals, 14; Redskins, 14.

The Cardinals ran the kickoff back to their 26. Malone threw Russell for a 10-yard loss at right end. Grosvenor's pass was intercepted by Baugh who romped back 15 yards to the Cardinals' 28.

Baugh banged through center for 5 yards, then flipped a pass to Malone who fumbled the ball after making the catch. It rolled outside on the Cardinals 15. It was ruled a complete pass. Battle ran the ball into field-goal kicking position and after two passes failed, Riley Smith, from his own 25-yard line, place-kicked wide of the posts.

Grosvenor raced 20 yards around right end and then Coffey fired a pass to Tinsley who was loose until Riley Smith brought him down after a 22-yard gain. On two plays, Parker smashed 13 yards through the line for a first down on the Redskins' 24. The Cardinals' attack bogged when two passes missed and on the last play of the quarter Bill Smith attempted a field goal by placement that was low, Baugh recovering the ball on the Redskins' 10.

Score: Redskins, 14; Cardinals, 14.

Standing on his own goal line, Baugh punted outside on the Cardinals' 45. Parker bulled his way through the Redskins' line for 13 yards in two tries and offside play gave the Bears a first down on the Redskins' 36. The Cardinals moved to another first down on the Redskins' 30 after Lawrence broke away for 7 yards. Grosvenor faking a run dashed wide toward the left end then passed to Tinsley for a touchdown, Tinsley taking the ball underneath the posts. Baker place-kicked the extra point.

Score, Cardinals, 21; Redskins, 14.

Battles went back to the Redskin backfield. Edwards returned the kickoff to the Redskins' 30 and on the first play a poor pass from center was recovered by Tinsley for the Cardinals on the Redskins' 25. Parker tore off 10 yards in two tries at the line. Three more tries netted Parker 5 more yards, and Baker, from his 18, attempted a placekick that was wide.

Taking the ball on the next kickoff, a Redskin advance was checked when Parker intercepted one of Baugh's passes and ran it back to the Redskins' 38.

Baugh threw a pass to Millner for a 40-yard gain to the Cardinal 45, then immediately threw another that Millner took down to the Cardinals' 13 for a 32-yard gain. A minute to play remained. Another pass aimed by Baugh at Millner was knocked down by Grosvenor behind the goal.

MISSA BUNCHA, the famed Russian seer, has kindly consented, after much persuasion, to use this column as a medium for making public his weekly football selections. He herewith offers you his choices for this afternoon's games.

GARRISON.

BUNCHA, it might be added, claims to have an average of .850 over a long stretch of years, but we figured if he could pick winners 75 per cent of the time for this column his selections would continue to be published each Saturday morning.

So, on his own, MISSA accepted the challenge, and was even heard to mumble something about having soft pickings this week. Well, here they are (winners are in capital letters):

CANISIUS vs. Catholic (Sunday), MARYLAND vs. St. John's, SHIPPENSBURG vs. Wilson Teachers, MINNESOTA vs. North Dakota State, TEXAS CHRISTIAN vs. Ohio State, TENNESSEE vs. Wake Forest, NAVY vs. William-Mary, WISCONSIN vs. South Dakota State, AMHERST vs. Vermont, NEW YORK U. vs. Penn Military; COLGATE vs. St. Lawrence, RUTGERS vs. Susquehanna, GEORGIA vs. Oglethorpe, TULANE vs. Clemson, VANDERBILT vs. Kentucky, L. S. U. vs. Florida, BRIGHAM YOUNG vs. Greeley Teachers, BALDWIN WALLACE vs. Kent State, MARQUETTE TEACHERS vs. Oshkosh Teachers, NORTH CAROLINA vs. South Carolina U.

VIRGINIA vs. Hampden-Sydney, WASHINGTON AND LEE vs. Wofford, WEST VIRGINIA vs. West Virginia Wesleyan, DUKE vs. V. P. I., DAVIS-ELKINS vs. Langley Field, RICHMOND vs. Randolph-Macon, TULSA vs. Oklahoma, S. M. U. vs. Denton Teachers, CALIFORNIA vs. St. Mary's, WASHINGTON STATE vs. Gonzaga, MONMOUTH TEACHERS vs. Pacific U., ILLINOIS vs. Ohio, CARROLL vs. Milwaukee Teachers, SOUTH DAKOTA vs. Wayne. SOUTHWESTERN vs. Union, LOYOLA vs. Spring Hill, CREIGHTON vs. St. Benedict, WESTERN RESERVE vs. Cincinnati, CATAWBA vs. Muhlenberg, AKRON vs. West Liberty, PITTSBURGH vs. Wesleyan, CORNELL vs. Penn State, DARTMOUTH vs. Bates, HOLY CROSS vs. St. Anselm, MANHATTAN vs. St. Bonaventure, ST. MARY'S (Texas) vs. United States Marines, XAVIER vs. Transylvania.

There are 50 games for MISSA to stand on. Let's check on the results and see how he does. If he has a good day we'll hear from him again next week; if not, we'll probably have to put up with him anyway, as he seemed to take it for granted that he is being given a long-term contract.

Five Marks Broken in Swim Meet

By Jack Munhall.

Led by Penn A. C., Pa., entries, the strongest field ever assembled for a local event smashed five records, including a Middle Atlantic mark, last night in the Venetian pool at the Shoreham Hotel where the annual President's Cup Regatta swimming and diving meet thrilled a packed house.

Marie Glazier, Penn A. C., stole honors in the show by personally accounting for new records. She scored an upset victory by defeating Dorothy Forbes, national indoor champion in the 150-yard women's medley race, breaking Miss Forbes' D. C. record and also her Middle Atlantic mark. Her time was 2:01.3 against the old Middle Atlantic mark of 2:06.

Ernie Boggs, Shoreham, found the home grounds so much to his liking that he broke his own D. C. record for the men's 100-yard backstroke, winning in the time of 1:07 as against the old mark of 1:09.5.

Miss Forbes, representing the Broadwood A. C., Pa., and making her first start since losing her national outboard backstroke title by one-half second in the national championships held early this month in Los Angeles, appeared to much better advantage than in her showing at the Maryland Club Garden early this season.

Her victory in the backstroke was accomplished with a minimum of effort and so completely did she outclass her strong field that the second place Miss Lubin finished more than 10 yards behind her new District of Columbia record time of 1:12.8 as compared with her former record of 1:14.2.

The Penn Athletic Club team of Thomas V. Williams, Henry Steingass and Fred Hoette captured the 300-yard medley race for men, ringing up the good time of 3:18.3 to lead two Y. M. C. A. teams, the A and B, which finished second and third, respectively.

A personal and strictly local battle was fought in the women's backstroke, in which June Booth, Shoreham, defeated her team mate, Betty Strohecker, thereby revenging her beating at Miss Strohecker's hands in the city championships held at Takoma. Off to a bad start, Miss Strohecker gained a little ground, but finished some 10 feet behind Miss Booth, who placed third.

Women.

100-yard free style—Won by Marie Glazer (Penn A. C.); second, Marjorie Price (Penn A. C.); third, Doris Baucher (K. of C.). Time, 1:07.9.

Men.

100-yard breast stroke—Won by Tom Williams (Penn A. C.); second, Arthur Hucht (K. of C.); third, Fred Moette (Penn A. C.). Time, 1:10.4.

300-yard team medley—Won by Penn A. C.; second, Y. M. C. A. (A) team; third, Y. M. C. A. (B) team. Time, 3:18.3.

Boys.

50-yard free-style—Won by Neil Swan (Shoreham); second, Howard K. Lutz (Reading Y. M. C. A.); third, John Bender (Reading Y. M. C. A.). Time, 26 seconds.

Nation Awaits Big Gridiron Battles Today

Cornell, one of the two "Ivy League" teams to make a September start, plays Penn State at Ithaca in the Eastern headliner. The big Red outfit squeezed out a touchdown victory last season, with a sophomore lineup. Lack of experienced backfield men may be offset by added line strength this year, but Cornell rates only a thin call over a rival that looks much tougher than last season.

Dartmouth's "Breather."

Dartmouth plays a "breather" against Bates, while the rest of the Eastern "Old Guard," comprising Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Pennsylvania and Columbia, marks time for another week in training camps.

Down East, the Holy Cross Crusaders are out for revenge against "little" St. Anselm, which held its bigger rival to a scoreless tie last year under the direction of Cleo O'Donnell, former Holy Cross coach.

Army launches its campaign next week but Navy, with material for all emergencies this season, figures to trim William & Mary tomorrow.

Moving south, there doesn't seem to be much cause for alarm among the top notchers, aside from the "natural" that pits the aspiring Vanderbilt Commodores against Kentucky at Nashville. This comes pretty close to being a tossup, with Vanderbilt enjoying whatever edge may be derived from playing on home grounds.

Tulane entertains no illusions in meeting the Clemson Tigers, who got off to a winning start last week and have been brought along at a fast clip because of the late next Saturday with Army at West Point. Tulane is the choice but the breaks may decide this one.

Duke, champions of the Southern Conference, have too much power for Virginia Tech. North Carolina gets the nod over South Carolina in another conference standout. Tennessee and Georgia Tech, with their eyes on Southeastern Conference honors, figure to take workouts at the expense of Wake Forest and Presbyterian.

Southwest fans, while following Texas Christian's intersectional fortunes, will find interest in the first showing of the University of Texas under Dana Bible's newly installed regime. The Long Horns will have their hands full taking the measure of Texas Tech.

V. M. I. Bows, 18-7, To Temple Eleven

Philadelphia, Sept. 24 (AP).—Aroused by a 77-yard run that gave Virginia Military Institute a 7-to-6 lead at the half, Temple rallied in the last two periods tonight to defeat the Southerners, 18 to 7, in Philadelphia's first college football game of the season.

Upsets Mark International Golf Battles

By the United Press.

Belmont, Mass., Sept. 24.—Smashing upsets that followed in amazingly rapid sequence today, blasted six top-flight golfers out of competition in the $12,000 international open championship.

Four members of the triumphant U. S. Rider Cup team and two veteran campaigners found dual combat poison to their hopes for the $3,000 top prize as two 18-hole rounds of match play reduced the field to 16 professionals.

Major casualties of the day were P. G. A. Champion Denny Shute, former national open titlist, Tony Manero, Slammin' Sam Snead and Horton Smith—all Ryder Cuppers—and the veterans Al Watrous and Harold 'Jug' McSpaden. Only other Ryder players remaining in the fight were National Open Champion Ralph Guldahl, former P. G. A. titleholders Johnny Revolta and Henry Picard, and Byron Nelson, winner of the 1937 Augusta Masters' crown.

At the start of the tourney, Shute and Snead had been rated as favorites along with former British and American amateur champion, Lawson Little, who advanced to the third round.

Unbeaten in match play for the past two years, Shute, West Newton (Mass.) pro, was wiped out in the first round by Herman Barron, of White Plains, N. Y. Barron got the jump at the start and held his advantage to come through 1 up.

Far off his game, Watrous was upset, 3 and 1, by an unknown, Johnny Thoren, of Woburn, Mass.

All of the other four upsets came in the second round. Less than 24 hours after he had captured the $250 medal prize by his remarkable putting, Manero became panicky as he faltered on the greens, and Johnny Farrell, of Short Hills, N. J., winner of the 1928 National Open, breezed in with a 5 and 1 triumph.

Both Snead and Smith ran into torrid competition. Mortie Dutra, of Royal Oak, Mich., took Sam's measure, 5 and 4, while Charlie Lacey, of Great Neck, L. I., lowest scoring American player in this year's British Open, erased Smith, 4 and 3.

The fight for the title developed into an all-professional affair, when Chicago's Dick Metz ousted the last of the Simon Pures, Ray Billows, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., 1 up.

Little became a 6-1 favorite to capture the crown after swinging through the first two rounds with comparative ease. He put out Art Straub, Brielle, N. Y., 3 and 2, in the morning and hung up a 5 and 3 victory over Emil Mashie, Fitchburg, Mass., during the afternoon.

Nelson won, 1-up, over Chicago's Frank Walsh, after being carried to the nineteenth green in the morning round by Johnny Levinson, of Kennebunk, Me. Guldahl beat Ed Oliver, of Wilmington, Del., 2-up after squeaking through by the same margin over Bud Geoghegan, of Hartford, Conn., in the morning play.

Runyan was carried to the twentieth green by former Public Links Champion Frank Strafaci, of Brooklyn. In the second round he ousted the dark horse of the tournament, Al Brosch, Farmingdale, N. Y., 4 and 3.

Harry Cooper, leading money winner of the year; the veteran Leo Diegel, Ray Mangrum, of Dayton, Ohio, and Clarence Clark, of Bloomfield, N. J., were the other survivors.

Yanks Win When Third Baseman's Blow Cleans Bases in Ninth.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Sept. 24.—Red Rolfe's booming triple, with the bases loaded and two out in the ninth inning, gave the New York Yankees a 5-to-1 victory over the Red Sox today in their first start as 1937 American League champions.

Rolfe's hit, which accounted for four runs, since Jimmy Foxx's error on the relay allowed the Yankee third baseman to score also, broke up a tight rookie pitching duel and gave young Joe Vance the decision over Archie McKain.

Vance allowed four hits, one of them Joe Cronin's homer, in the eight innings he worked before he was relieved by a pinch hitter. Paul Andrews pitched the last inning and was tagged for three straight hits before Pinch Hitter Doc McNair lined into a double play with the bases loaded to end the game.

Plebes Hosts To G. W. Cubs

Navy Frosh Won in 1936 in Initial Meeting.

George Washington's freshman gridders get their first taste of competition this afternoon at Annapolis, where they stack up against the Navy Plebes at 1:10 p. m.

It will be their second meeting, Navy emerging victorious in the first game, last year, by a 12-7 margin. This afternoon, however, Jean Sexton, frosh tutor, figures his boys are in for a real trimming, inasmuch as his men have been out only two days this week and only three weeks altogether, while the Plebes have been drilling for the last six weeks.

Meanwhile, Backfield Coach Bill Reinhart is heading for Buchannon, W. Va., where he will scout both West Virginia and Wesleyan in their game this afternoon. The Colonials meet Wesleyan here in their second game, while the Mountaineers are listed for later in the season.

Line Coach "Botchy" Koch entrained last night for Knoxville, Tenn., to scout Wake Forest against the Vols. The Deacons will be here next week for their annual debate with the downtown gridders.

Alice Marble Wins From Dot Bundy

Los Angeles, Sept. 24 (AP).—Alice Marble, former United States Women's Singles Tennis Champion, and Gracyn Wheeler, of Santa Monica won their way today into the finals of the Pacific Southwest Tennis Championships.

Miss Bundy forced the play in the opening set, but the former champion turned the tables completely in the second and did not let her get a game. Miss Marble broke her opponent's service in the third game of the deciding set and went on to win.

Fight Films Scheduled For State, Cameo Shows

Local followers of fistiana will get their first glimpse of the four championship bouts held in New York Thursday night. The highlight of the celluloid consists of excerpts from the Barney Ross-Cerafino Garcia bout. The fight films will be shown in conjunction with the regular program today and throughout the week.

Ambers-Ross Match Now Aim of Jacobs

By Jack Paulus.
Sports Editor of The Post.

New York, Sept. 24.—Out of the wreckage of the financial holocaust that was his carnival of champions last night, Promoter Mike Jacobs salvaged several little items of great importance in the fistic realm; another carnival next year, an Ambers-Ross welterweight title fight this winter, a Steele-Apostoli title fight and an Armstrong-Montanez fight.

Although the promoter went deep in his private coffers to cover up the shortage on the carnival, which drew slightly less than $200,000 net, Jacobs was wreathed with smiles in his Hippodrome office today. His first concern was an immediate endeavor to get Ambers and Ross signed for a Madison Square Garde.. show soon after the snow flies.

Not Impressive.

Freddie Apostoli, the new "European middleweight champion," left early today for a brief vacation in California, but signified that he is willing to return any time Jacobs has a suitable match lined up for him. The Pacific Coast Italian was anything but impressive last night as he won on a technical knockout over Marcel Thil, the Bald Eagle of the Seine. Freddie may meet Ken Overlin on the Coast before coming East again, Chris Dundee, pilot of the Washington fighter, wired this reporter today. Overlin scored an upset victory over Apostoli at the Hippodrome here last winter and Freddie wants to even the score before taking on anyone else.

Mike Jacobs said that he was in communication with Freddie Steele today, trying to line up the recognized middleweight king for a Garden fight with Apostoli. Steele has been consistently evading Freddie, largely because the late Dave Miller, Steele's pilot, and the manager of Apostoli were bitter enemies. Miller's recent death in Seattle leaves the decision up to Freddie whose reign will be forever haunted by the Apostoli ghost.

Promises Match.

Another fight Jacobs has promised to line up is the Henry Armstrong-Pedro Montanez scrap with the winner promised a crack at either Ambers or Ross. Matchmaker Al Weill of the Twentieth Century Club is currently working on this number.

Harry Jeffra, Baltimore's new bantamweight king, must meet Sixto Escobar, the lad he defeated last night, in a return title match within 90 days, according to the terms of their carnival agreement. This takes care of Mr. Jeffra for the next three months during which time he can gain some solace in the dubious honor of being champion of an unprofitable division

Bucs Pound Gene Schott, Beat Reds

Six Hits in Sixth Inning Produce Six Runs and 8-2 Win.

Cincinnati, Sept. 24.—Four successive errors gave Pittsburgh 6 runs on five hits in the sixth inning today and sent them on to an 8-to-2 victory in a series opener with the Cincinnati Reds.

It was the Bucs' fourteenth win of the year over the eighth-place Rhinelanders and gave them a three and a half game lead over Boston, idle in fifth place. The Reds have topped the visitors only once this year.

In the fatal sixth, Todd singled, scoring Big Poison, and when Lombardi muffed Myers' throw of Brubaker's grounder, Vaughan romped home. Young singled and Suhr and Todd crossed the plate. Goodman fumbled Young's one-baser and when Bauers singled to drive in Brubaker, Young went to second.

Kleinhans replaced Schott. Lloyd Waner sacrificed, but Kleinhans failed to cover first on Jensen's roller and another single was chalked up. Young crossed the plate on Paul Waner's fly to Walker to end the game's scoring.

Jockey Is Injured In 'Graw' Feature; LongShotsPayOff

By Walter Haight.
A Stag Correspondent.

Coronium, teamed with Bonny Clabber as the Millsdale Stable-Latellier entry, drove to victory in the mile and 70 yards' event. Recussion, the favorite, was second, and Alexandrine third. Coronium paid a $19.60 mutuel.

The day's big money angle came in the daily double. Graeme Cracker, at a $23.10 mutuel, won the first race and then Flying Orphan, a $23.50 shot, took a photo decision from Happy Hostess in the second. The "11 and 12" combination brought a $938.30 mutuel to 15 persons.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CORONIUM (entry), $19.60, $5.60, $2.80; RECUSSION, $2.80, $2.20; ALEXANDRINE, $2.30.

CORONIUM moved around on outside of leaders and, under pressure, won going away. RECUSSION, probably best, had a rough trip and was unable to find racing room in midstretch. ALEXANDRINE set the pace and tired in final three-sixteenths. CAREFUL MISS went wide. BONNY CLABBER stumbled causing MISTRAL KIN to fall and SWEET DESIRE fell over her.

TABITHA, in motion at break and raced along rail while setting pace, withstood long drive to last ahead of BUCK LANGHORNE. The latter, closest to leader from start, came up on outside, but could not gain through final stretch. BABY TALK dropped back gradually. SIR JIM JAMES, unprepared at break, closed some ground. DARK HOPE was never a factor.

Hamilton Natl. Announces 4th Anniversary

Deposits Increase $3,300,000 in Year to Total $25,000,000.

E. C. Graham, president of the Hamilton National Bank, announced yesterday the fourth anniversary of the opening of the bank, which ran a successful year of continued growth in deposits and community service.

Deposits of $8,725,000 at the opening date have grown to about $25,000,000, the increase for the past year being over $3,300,000. Net earnings and profits, before dividends, for the four-year period totaled $784,000. Dividends aggregating $100,000 have been paid.

All offices of the bank are on a sound earning basis, and the continuance of branches has, therefore, been fully justified. The last year has been particularly marked by a steady and gratifying increase in sound loans.

Capital Transit Net Increases

The Capital Transit Co. revealed an income loss of $27,745.23 in August, which compares with a deficit of $43,242.25 for August, 1936. A gain this year of $15,497.02,or 35.8 per cent, according to the monthly statement filed with the Public Utilities Commission yesterday.

Operating revenues totaled $847,067.72, an increase of $11,117.05 over last year. At the same time operating expenses required $662,732.50, a reduction of $32,638.39, which left an operating income of $2,471.77, a gain of 25.7 per cent.

Net income for the first eight months of this year amounted to $84,958.60, compared with a deficit of $38,207.31.

New York, Sept. 24.—Declines in virtually every financial and commodity market gave the week a rather weary ending. Government and other bonds turned down with stocks. Cotton fell into new low ground for the year with $1 a bale decline, bringing futures down 5 to 6 cents a pound for the year. December wheat fell 1⅛ cents to 105⅞ cents a bushel. Stock prices were lower from the start, but the heaviest selling converged around the first half of the lunch hour, when the ticker tape dropped behind several minutes and prices melted 1 to 3 points.

After that a fair rally took place, leaving the market to drift through the later trading not far above their poorest prices. Stock turnover was around 2,400,000 shares, the largest since September 13 and the second heaviest day in more than six months.

Winding up the full trading sessions of the week with another sharp crack in prices, the stock market will increase apprehensions of everybody—including no doubt the Government—that a considerable trade recession is in the making. Evidence is plentiful enough that some recession already has taken place. Steel company order books are lighter, railroads are retrenching, the telephone subscriptions have slipped a little this month, building lags and railroad traffic, although increasing with the season, is not coming up to expectations. Motor production is down at the moment because of preparation of new models, but it has been good. What the reception to the higher prices will be remains to be seen.

Juggled Barometer.

On the barometric side too much anxiety need not be created. It is true that a falling stock market in itself tends to slow down business, and that is going on to some extent now; but it is equally true that if a good recovery should take place soon the autumn and winter buying would revive. Stocks have a good record as a barometer, but only when it is not tinkered with too much. The trouble now is that a great deal of tinkering is taking place. With managed economy and managed credit the glass can rise and fall rapidly.

The case for lower prices and falling business rests principally on distrust of Washington, aggravated a bit by the disturbance of wars and certainly by the drives of labor for higher wages without higher production and the outlook for tax increases, another way, perhaps, of pointing to Washington. For the defense of continued good business, the case is well summed up by opinions expressed at a National Industrial Conference Board meeting. They include the momentum business already has attained, the absence of too heavy inventories, the reserve of a building recovery, greater public purchasing power, the abundance of cheap money. To some observers the situation much resembles that of the autumn of 1927, which was followed by an inflationary boom.

Hot Money.

The week ends with various rumors and conferences on credit. Attention at the moment is centered on the discussions being held at Washington with the British authorities on hot money control, a problem which in recent weeks has seemed to be solving itself with the liquidation in this market of a good deal of foreign security holdings. At least, that sort of hot money diminished, but hot money in the real sense, i. e., funds which are already flighty and easily moved because of political or any developments which may be far removed from investment factors, probably have increased.

The unrest abroad and the wars and threats of fighting have sent some capital to this side, but according to well informed persons it has not gone into our security markets. For that reason it should cause no uneasiness on the part of President Roosevelt, whose concern has been that sudden withdrawals of foreign money from our stock and bond markets would precipitate declines. We have plenty of gold to take care of any shifts in floating bank balances or capital lodged temporarily in short term issues.

Credit Base Widens.

On the business side of credit, the weekly Federal Reserve Bank statement disclosed that which had been predicted all along, namely, that the New York banks had prepared their holdings of Government securities with autumn maturity dates so that they could escape any tightening in money rates by being obliged to borrow at the Reserve bank. The reduction shown this week of $111,000,000 in Government obligations held by New York banks indicates that the maturing obligations at the tax date were heavily owned here and were allowed to run off. That has made the credit position in New York more comfortable and has made unnecessary any heavy selling of Government bonds in the market.

Commercial demands on the banks in the past week lightened, the rise in loans amounting to only $7,000,000. Meanwhile the recent inflationary operation of the Treasury, in putting $300,000,000 of gold to work, is slowly taking effect. Excess reserves this week have increased by $140,000,000 and now stand at $1,020,000,000. That should give at least temporary encouragement to the bond market, but the ability of the new issues market to take much of the corporation financing planned for it this autumn will depend on the action of the stock market more than anything else. Few will risk funds in corporation bonds, sold to finance business expansion in large part, when the stock market with its falling prices is seemingly forecasting business recession.

Weakness in Washington.

Markets are now playing the old game of see-saw. Before our opening cables from London say the market there declined in sympathy with the Wall Street weakness of the day before. Then when our market declines further in the morning, Wall Street commentators say the fall was in sympathy with the weakness in London. It would be more to the point to say that both the London and the New York markets were falling on account of sympathy with Washington, where the decline in common sense is becoming more and more noticeable.

Gold Hoarding.

Hoarders on the Continent have come to the rescue of the British treasury and the United States Treasury in the London gold market, bids from these sources being sufficient lately to absorb much of the supply which otherwise would be taken by this country or by British exchange control authorities. Probably political uncertainties on the Continent are responsible for the hoarding demand for gold, rather than any expectation or hope that the price will go up. At least fears of a cut in the gold price are now pretty dead.

Corn Climbs 5¼ Cents After 6⅜ Cent Slump

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—Gyrations of September corn prices today included steep tumbles of 6⅜ cents a bushel, but also 5¾ cents sudden rallies overcoming most of the losses.

Charges that a "corner" or "price squeeze" is being attempted grew increasingly frequent, whereas on the other hand the receipt of corn in Chicago today, 219 cars, reached the largest total witnessed in many weeks.

At the close, corn futures taken as a whole were ⅞-2⅛ cents lower compared with yesterday's finish, Sept. $1.10-1.11, Dec. 63¾-64, May 64⅝-¾, wheat 1⅝-2⅛ down, Sept. $1.05½-⅝, Dec. $1.05¾-⅞, May $1.06⅛-1.07, oats unchanged to ⅝ off, Dec. 31-31⅛, and rye showing ⅞-1⅛ setback, Dec. 79⅝. Provisions results were unchanged to 35 cents lower.

Dr. L. N. Chase Rites Tuesday At Rochester

Writer and Literary Critic Dies After Protracted Illness.

Funeral services for Dr. Lewis N. Chase, 64, of 110 Maryland avenue northeast, well-known writer and literary critic, will be held Tuesday at 2:30 p. m. in Rochester, N. Y., his former home. Burial will be in Mount Hope Cemetery, Rochester.

Dr. Chase died Thursday in Garfield Hospital after a long illness. He and his wife spent the summer in East Gloucester, Mass., hoping for an improvement in Dr. Chase's health.

Dr. Chase had lived in Washington for the last five years and belonged to three local clubs, the Cosmos, Washington Authors and the Palaver Club.

He received his B. A. from Rochester University in 1895 and took his Ph. D. at Columbia in 1903. He also had studied at Stanford and at Grenoble University, in France.

Appointments to teach English literature took Dr. Chase to universities throughout the world, including Brown, Wisconsin and Louisiana in this country; Muslim University in Aligarh, India; Bordeaux University, France, and the Peking National Normal in China. He had published books on Bernard Shaw, Swinburne, Poe and Thomas Holly Chivers, the Georgia poet.

Dr. Chase leaves his wife, Mrs. Emma S. Chase; and two brothers, Frank F. and Harry B. Chase, both of Riverside, Calif.

Auto Strikes Bicycle, Kills Man, Injures Boy

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 24 (AP). Henry Watson, 25, was fatally injured and Walter Lee Kellam, 16, was seriously hurt last night when the bicycle they were riding was struck by an automobile 1 mile south of here on Route 1. The car did not stop.

Dr. Oliver Hart Declines Call To Episcopacy

Rector of St. John's Decides to Remain in Capital.

Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, yesterday formally declined the position of Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Central New York, to which he was elected two weeks ago.

Deciding instead to remain in Washington, the rector said he was not persuaded that he had been "truly called" to the ministration of the New York diocese. Had he accepted, he would have moved at once to either Utica or Syracuse, N. Y., to become an assistant to Bishop Edward Huntington Coley.

Dr. Hart's statement declining the election follows:

"In considering an election to the Episcopacy there are many factors which a priest must take into consideration. The paramount question is the first one asked a bishop-elect in our service for the consecrating of bishops: 'Are you persuaded that you are truly called to this ministration, according to the will of Our Lord Jesus Christ, and the order of this church?' I am not so persuaded, and, therefore, have declined the election.

"The work in Central New York appeals to me very, very much. I began my ministry as a lay reader in that diocese. I went to Hobart College and love that section of New York and its people. I have many friends among the clergy and laity, and they have assured me of a warm welcome.

"Bishop Coley has explained to me his need of assistance, and I should have been happy if I had felt called to render that service. Central New York is a great diocese with an appealing opportunity. I hope that its people who were so kind and generous to elect me to this high office realize that I have declined because I believe it is God's will for me to do so."

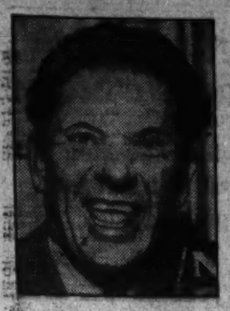
Bob Burns Says—



I declare—life must have been a complicated problem in the old days when a fella had'ta figger out his marital problems himself. Now all you have'ta do is to go to one of them professional listeners, that for three dollars he straightens you out in no time.

I had a friend that went to one of them fellas.

This listener fella says, "Brother, your case is simple." He says, "You just go home and scare your wife and make her think she's gonna lose you and you'll find out that she really loves you."

Well, my friend borrowed a gun and walked into the room where his wife was sittin' and says, "I know you don't love me and I'm gonna shoot myself." His wife sneered and says, "That's just like you to do a mean trick like that when you know how nervous I get when I hear a shot."

Duce and Hitler Expected to Make Joint Plea for Peace Before Nazi Throngs

Troops Guard Festive Munich On Eve of Fascist Love Feast

Leaders of State Hope to Draft New Locarno With Britain and France; Spanish War May Be Snag; Brown Shirts Talk It Over.

By the Associated Press.

Munich, Germany, Sept. 24.—The Duce of Fascism and the Fuehrer of Naziism will meet tomorrow for the second time in their historic careers to toast the common ideals of their political creeds and perhaps to address to the world a joint appeal for peace.

Plea for Peace Planned.

What they will do at the second meeting and of what they will talk were great questions in the minds of European statesmen tonight.

Informed sources declared the two heads of state had agreed to make a joint world appeal for peace when they address a huge demonstration in Berlin's Olympic Stadium Tuesday.

Mussolini was said already to have completed his speech, both in German and Italian. Italians believed the joint appeal would be so strongly worded that it might form the basis for lasting understanding in Europe.

New Locarno Visioned.

Some sort of new Locarno treaty appeared to be the idea in mind—but with Belgium excluded because of her recently reaffirmed neutrality and her desire to keep out of foreign alignments.

The old Locarno included Belgium, Britain, Italy, France and Germany and contained the Rhineland clause, forbidding German military concentration in that buffer area next to France. The Rhineland now is remilitarized.

One danger point, political observers here believed, is the Spanish civil war, with Germany and Italy favoring Gen. Franco's insurgents, Britain seeking to maintain a neutral attitude and France favoring the Madrid-Valencia government.

There was also the interpretation from Italian quarters—as well as British—that this week's Italo-French conversations in Geneva were designed to give Mussolini the upper hand in any dealing with Hitler. Mussolini, these quarters felt, sought to strengthen his position with France and Britain before the meeting.

German foreign officials flatly denounced any inference that the Italian Duce had acted behind Hitler's back in this matter.

Officials felt that the conversations between the Italian representative to Geneva, Bova Scoppa, and French Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos had been overemphasized. (London sources asserted Il Duce had promised no more Italian volunteers would go to Spain to fight with the insurgents, thereby clearing a path toward Italian alignment with France and Britain in a new balance of power.)

Hitler's old guard, the Brown Shirts, are known to be skeptical about the new Nazi-Fascist friendship, and they met tonight in the famous Burger Brau Keller, presumably to talk it over.

Briton Reviews French Defense

Strasbourg, France, Sept. 24 (AP). A demonstration of Anglo-French solidarity coincided today with the journey of Italy's premier, Benito Mussolini, to his momentous rendezvous in Germany with Chancellor Adolf Hitler.

Leslie Hore-Belisha, British war minister, arrived here to make an extended inspection of France's famous Maginot line, the great barrier of steel and concrete fortifications paralleling the Franco-German frontier.

The war minister's visit was less spectacular than that of Mussolini to Hitler, but informed observers considered it no less significant.

Husband Missing, French Jail Singer

Paris, Sept. 24 (U.P.).—Police tonight jailed Mme. Nicholas Skobline and ordered a nation-wide search for her missing husband, who they believe holds the solution to the disappearance of Gen. Eugene Miller, leader of exiled White Russian war veterans.

Detention of Mme. Skobline, a famous singer of Russian folk songs under the name of Plevitskaia, was ordered when secret police obtained information her husband might have been a Bolshevist spy in the White Russian ranks.

Greatest Jews Are Named in Poll of World

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Sept. 24.—The "120 greatest living Jews" were named today to a Jewish hall of fame selected in a world-wide poll by The Ivrim, honor society of Chicago Jewish students.

Their purpose was to hold up "living ideals" to Jewish youth and they required only that nominees must have been alive on Rosh Hashanah (Jewish New Year) of 5697 (September 28, 1936).

Scientist Albert Einstein, Actor Paul Muni, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., and Supreme Court Justices Louis Brandeis and Benjamin Cardozo won election to the distinguished group.

Seven Have Died.

Nominees were drawn principally from medicine, the humanities, jurisprudence, the arts, sciences, the rabbinate, journalism, sociology, statecraft, education, Jewish movements and engineering.

Seven have since died. They were Adolph Ochs, publisher of the New York Times; Percy Selden Straus, former Ambassador to France; Ossip Grabilowitsch, pianist; Jacob de Haas, journalist; George Gershwin, composer; Dr. Alfred Adler, psychiatrist, and Meier Dizengoff, mayor of Tel Aviv.

Leon Blum Included.

The group included:

Former French Premier Leon Blum, musicians Mischa Elman, Jascha Heifetz, Yehudi Menuhin and Efrem Zimbalist, authors Sholom Asch, Leon Feuchtwanger, Fannie Hurst, Ludwig Lewisohn, Emil Ludwig, Arnold and Stefan Zweig; sculptor, Jacob Epstein; composers, Maurice Ravel and Oscar Strauss.

Maxim Litvinoff, U. S. S. R. commissar of foreign affairs; Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association; Dr. Sigmund Freud, Prof. Felix Frankfurter; dramatist, David Pinski; Maax Reinhardt, of the theater; radio engineer, David Sarnoff; Dr. Stephen Wise, president of the Jewish Institute of Religion, and Lillian D. Wald, founder of Henry Street Settlement, in New York.

Questionnaires and 420 suggested names were sent to Zionist organizations and Jewish educational groups throughout the world.

Convention Slate Ignores Tammany

Albany, N. Y., Sept. 24 (AP).—New York Democrats chose today a strictly New Deal slate of 15 candidates for delegates-at-large to the 1938 constitutional convention which Postmaster General Farley predicted "will ride to victory in November and contribute to the convention's success."

Missing, however, to Farley's expressed "regret," was the name of Democratic Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, who declined nomination.

Irene Castle Asks Custody of Child

Chicago, Sept. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin, pacemaker in the dancing and fashion worlds for a generation, followed up her divorce suit against Maj. Frederic McLaughlin today with the announcement that she would demand charge of their 12-year-old daughter, Barbara.

McLaughlin, who heads a coffee concern and owns the Chicago Blackhawks hockey team, asserted the child wants to remain with him. He said he was willing to leave their other child, William, 8, with the mother because of his youth.

A. F. L. Men Leave Jobs to Fight C.I.O.

San Francisco, Sept. 24 (AP).—Four thousand A. F. L. teamsters and 3,000 C. I. O. longshoremen harrangued and jostled each other along the waterfront today but the truck drivers again failed to tie up shipping and the State Federation of Labor took over direction of their battle to crush John L. Lewis' maritime union leadership.

Trucking virtually stopped throughout San Francisco. The teamsters quit to fight for jurisdiction over warehousemen organized by the C. I. O.

Reciprocal Stock Tax Unpopular at London

London, Sept. 24 (AP).—The suggestion that the United States and Great Britain arrange a reciprocal scheme of taxation upon foreign securties apparently was receiving little support in London financial centers today.

Some sources said such a tax would reduce only slightly the speculative business and that few British holders of American securities would be induced to sell.

Lloyd's Lowers Odds On Endeavour's Safety

London, Sept. 24 (AP).—British insurance companies tonight raised their reinsurance rate on the yacht Endeavour I, missing at sea for 11 days, to 40 per cent. In effect they were wagering only 3 to 2 that she would turn up safe.

The British challenger in the 1934 race for the America's Cup disappeared September 13 in a violent storm off Nantucket Lightship when she snapped her tow line. A report to Lloyds yesterday she had been sighted off the Azores proved false.

Transatlantic Plane Lands.

Court Bullied Strike Counsel, Seamen Assert

"An obvious desire to intimidate lawyers appearing for strikers" was charged last night by officers of the Baltimore Maritime Council in criticism of remarks made by District Judge William C. Coleman, of Baltimore, in a ruling on a suit to evict sit-down strikers from the S. S. Oakmar.

In a statement issued by the Committee for Industrial Organization here, Judge Coleman was quoted as saying:

"Finally, a word to the attorneys for the respondents in this case, and to other members of this bar who may seek to appear in like cases in the future. You are all sworn officers of this court, but that does not mean that your status is akin to that of innkeepers—that you must throw your protecting arm about whomsoever may apply to you, regardless of the merits of the case."

Officers of the Maritime Council declared that "nowhere have sit-down strikes been declared illegal by a competent court." They said that "in effect, the opinion of Judge Coleman would rob strikers of their constitutional right to a legal defense."

The National Labor Relations Board yesterday sought to prevent a recurrence of the storm raised by its recent order for cancellation of a closed-shop contract, obtained by the American Federation of Labor, on a petition by the rival Committee for Industrial Organization for an election to determine the collective bargaining agency for employes involved. The case was that of the National Electric Products Co., and in the election that followed the board's ruling, the A. F. of L. won. Federation officials heatedly criticized the board for its action.

In a new case involving employes of the National Motor Bearing Co., of Oakland, Calif., a closed shop contract has been granted the A. F. of L.'s International Association of Machinists. The United Automobile Workers, a C. I. O. affiliate, has won a board examiner's ruling that it, rather than the A. F. of L. union, has a majority of the employes involved. The examiner held that tool and die workers should not be included in the bargaining unit, the Federation attorneys contending that they should.

The N. L. R. B. meanwhile certified the C. I. O.'s National Maritime Union as the representative for collective bargaining of all unlicensed personnel on International Mercantile Marine Co. ships. The C. I. O. union polled 2,563 votes in an election, compared to 170 for the federation's International Seamen's Union.

Plane Cracks Up, Pilot Is Injured, Flight Is Success

A Marine Corps lieutenant was injured slightly and one of the Army's new-type fighting planes was damaged in landing at Buffalo, N. Y., yesterday, but Army officials here insisted on describing the ship's test flight as a "success." They kept details secret.

The right wheel of the big monoplane, driven by two "pusher" motors, folded as the ship touched the landing field, and the right wing and propeller were damaged.

Contract

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

If it were possible for a partnership to reach its best contract in one or two bids, the defenders would be truly up against it. Fortunately for the competitive angle of the game, it is rarely possible to select the correct final contract without exchanging detailed information, and this exchange must be "honest"—not psychic, unless the bidding team is willing to risk the catastrophic result of mutual misunderstanding.

It is the defending team's privilege and duty "to listen in" on the enemy's wires, and to draw profound inferences from the fragmentary messages. Consider the reasoning that actuated West's opening lead against the slam contract in today's hand.

	♠ K Q 10 5 4 ♡ 9 6 ◇ A Q 7 2 ♣ J 8
♠ A 8 6 3 ♡ Q J 10 ◇ J ♣ K 10 7 6 2	North West East South	♠ 2 ♡ 8 7 4 3 2 ◇ 6 3 ♣ Q 9 5 4 3
	♠ J 9 7 ♡ A K 5 ◇ K 10 9 8 5 4 ♣ A

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	3 ◇	Pass
4 ◇	Pass	4 N T	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	6 ◇	Pass
Pass	Pass

Only beginners jump at the chance to lead Aces against slam contracts; experts make such leads only after searching analysis of a given situation. Thus, it is likely that the two classes of players furthest removed from each other would have defeated the slam on this hand. Beginners would lay down the spade Ace because they didn't know what else to do. West, who was an expert, opened the Ace up because he confidently expected the result that actually followed.

West had reasoned as follows: Jump takeout bids such as South's are made by good players only if one of two situations exists. First, if they have a good hand containing a solid suit, even though they have no particular fit with partner's suit and second, if their good hand does not include a solid suit but does contain a good fit with partner's bid suit. The subsequent bidding told West that South's jump takeout had been of the second class. The evidence to this view was North's repeated diamond raising and the fact that West himself held a diamond honor. Of course, it was possible that South had a splendid diamond suit and North only four small ones, but it was much more likely that North had at least one high honor for his raise. South then could have only a broken suit, and yet had contracted for a slam. The implication, therefore, was overwhelming that South had at least a fair fit with partner's spade suit. This, in turn, made it quite probable that East was sitting with a singleton spade and would be able to ruff the second round.

Save Americans Despite 'Risks,' Fleet Ordered

Sudden Change in Policy Indicated in Yarnell's Delayed Statement.

professions which are their only means of livelihood. These persons are unwilling to leave until their businesses have been destroyed or they are forced to leave due to actual physical danger. Until such time comes, our naval forces cannot be withdrawn without failure in our duty and without bringing great discredit on the United States Navy.

Must Accept Risks.

"In giving assistance and protection our naval forces may at times be exposed to dangers which will in most cases be slight, but in any case these risks must be accepted."

The admiral's statement, it was learned, was communicated to the Navy Department only after its delivery to the fleet officers. Whether the statement then was submitted to the President and the State Department, no one in authority at either department would say.

However, orders sent to the fleet from the Navy Department are communicated to Secretary of State Hull, and it was assumed that in a matter of such importance as the admiral's statement, the State Department had been advised of its nature.

Hull Still Silent.

Secretry Hull declined to discuss the matter at his press conference, replying there was nothing new on the policy of the Government toward protection or evacuation of nationals, on the declaration by Chinese Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek that the nine-power pact bound this country to come to China's aid, or on how closely correlated are the activities of the State and Navy Departments in the Chinese crisis.

He said there had been no response from Japan to this country's written representations against the bombing of Nanking.

It was recalled, meanwhile, that in the interim between receipt of Admiral Yarnell's statement here and its publication, a meeting was held by the Navy general board, the department's policy-making body, and there was little doubt the admiral's action had been carefully studied by the board.

101 Americans Escape.

Gratification was expressed at the State Department over word a group of 101 Americans, for whom fear had been felt, had safely made their way from the mountain resort of Mokanshan, near Hangchow, and had been removed, by a circuitous course, to Shanghai. The group consisted chiefly of women and children. Among those rescued were the Rev. and Mrs. P. W. Hamlet, of Farmville, Va.; the Rev. and Mrs. E. H. McMillan and two children, of Richmond, and Dr. and Mrs. M. O. Williams and two children, of Portsmouth, Va.

The Chinese embassy last night reported receiving a message from the Nanking government saying Chinese troops charged that Japanese captors of Kuan, 35 miles north of Peiping, "resorted to the use of asphyxiating gas." The message added Chinese forces had defeated Japanese troops between Hunyuan and Linchiu, killing 3,000 and capturing 2,000 Japanese. Reports Gen. Chiang Kai-shek had left Nanking for Nanchang were denied.

Embargoes Again Urged.

The day also brought two moves by advocates of embargoes on war supplies as a means of safeguarding this country's neutrality.

Frederick J. Libbey, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War, declared in a radio address the United States faces the "choice of invocation of the neutrality act of war."

Speaking on behalf of six organizations seeking application of the neutrality law, he said:

"Surely the way to promote respect for law internationally is not to flout our own laws.

"The people do not want war. What they do want is to know whether President Roosevelt intends to carry out the neutrality law, and when."

The same organizations in a message to President Roosevelt en route to Seattle, criticized Thursday's action of the Maritime Commission in voting a $50 bonus per man for sailors aboard Government-operated ships entering the Spanish or Far Eastern war zones.

Assails War Bonuses.

Their message said:

"A Government agency is now offering bonuses to a few American sailors to enter war zones. It recognizes the possibility of internment of American vessels, clearly admitting that a state of war exists. The order affects Spanish and Chinese seas. You applied the neutrality act in the Spanish war. The offer of a mere pittance of $50 to a few sailors to risk their lives is a part of an effort to continue trade with the Far East, which risks involving all Americans in war. When will the law passed by Congress to protect the country against war be invoked?"

Capture of Paotingfu Claimed.

Peiping, Sept. 24 (AP).—The Japanese army announced tonight it had stormed the walled city of Paotingfu, strong point of China's defense system in Hopei Province, and annihilated its garrison.

Japanese here hailed the fall of Paotingfu as the greatest victory of their North China campaign. In Peiping they celebrated ecstatically, shouting the slogan "On to Shihchiachuang!"

Shihchiachuang is the vital railway junction 160 miles south of Peiping where a line runs westward into Shansi Province from the north-south Peiping-Hankow trunk railway.

Munitions From Soviet.

Tokyo, Sept. 24 (U.P.).—China and Russia are negotiating a secret political and military treaty as the result of which China is to get a gigantic supply of war munitions, the Japanese Domei news agency asserted today in a dispatch from Shanghai.

As one item in a detailed list of war materials which it was alleged Russia was to send to China, the Domei agency cited a fleet of 300 airplanes.

Britain Protests Bombing.

London, Sept. 24 (U.P.).—Great Britain today sent a strongly-worded protest to Japan expressing "horror at the deplorable loss of civilian life" in Canton, South China metropolis, in a series of Japanese air raids.

Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden were said to have informed other cabinet leaders that Japan would not hesitate to commit other acts involving the deaths of civilians unless a new and strong protest were made.

Japan Studies Protests.

Refugee Arrives From Yunnan With Rare Bamboo, No Stories

Miss Genevieve Wimsatt is probably the only refugee from China who has arrived in this country with a potted purple bamboo tree, material for a novel about a seventeenth century Chinese beauty and no tales of blood and destruction.

The Washington writer arrived here a day or so ago and ever since has been disappointing morbid friends who expected to hear detailed accounts of bombings and narrow escapes from death.

The closest she came to danger was at the time wher her liner, the President Taft, was anchored off Shanghai, taking on refugees. A shell struck near the boat, "but I didn't see it or even hear it," she confesses.

The people who boarded the boat there were mostly tourists, although some were abandoning homes in Shanghai. The composure they maintained despite the dreadful scenes they had witnessed and the property losses they had sustained impressed Miss Wimsatt more than their eyewitness accounts of the fighting.

"One girl told me the whole thing had been just like an exciting moving picture," she said. She herself was sequestered from the battle front in Yunnan Province, a mountainous section in the Southwest. Here, far from artillery and tanks, she spent the summer gathering material about the Moon-Faced Beauty, a neglected but important figure in Chinese history, for love of whom Gen. Wu San-Kuei betrayed the province to the Manchus from the north and effected the downfall of the Ming Dynasty in 1647.

Here also she acquired a rare purple bamboo which she has turned over to Dr. D. Y. Morrison, head of the Bureau of Foreign Plant Introduction in the Department of Agriculture, who believes the specimen to be the only one in the United States.

The plant was given her as a farewell present by grateful Yunnan natives, who never had heard of the illustrious Moon-Faced Beauty until Miss Wimsatt's coming.

Miss Wimsatt will continue research for her new book this year. Her previous works include "Selling Wilted Peonies," "Chinese Shadow Shows," "Number Two Wife" and "The Bright Concubine." She is staying with her sister, Mrs. Albert W. Fox, 4817 Blagden avenue northwest.
